Acknowledgments

I would like to express my gratitude to all members of the tuneful quartet that has accompanied me during my PhD-studies: I thank my promotor Anne Troelstra for his continuous support; I have learned a lot from him. It has always been pleasant to talk to him and his interest in my scientific and non-scientific life has been very stimulating. I thank my co-promotor Dick de Jongh for everything he has taught me and for the support he gave me during difficult times. I have enjoyed working with him from the first day on. I thank my co-promotor Albert Visser for introducing me to one of the main subjects of this thesis and for his help along the way. His original ideas and lively way of explaining have often inspired me. I thank Michiel van Lambalgen for offering me the job, and for lending me an ear in times of doubt. His attitude towards science has set an example for me.

During November 1998 I visited Lev Beklemishev at the University of Münster. I would like to thank him and the people from the mathematical logic group for the fruitful and pleasant time I had there.

I would like to thank Jeff Paris for the time he spent on me when I visited him at the University of Manchester in February 1996. I also recall with pleasure the two Sunday afternoons I have spent with him and his family.

Furthermore, I would like to thank the following people for various discussions or motivating questions: Carlos Areces, Johan van Benthem, Richard Booth, Wolfgang Burr, Kees Doets, Lex Hendriks, Grigori Mints, Marc Pauly, Vladimir Rybakov, Bas Spitters, Wim Veldman, Frank Veltman, Kai Wehmeier and Domenico Zambella.

I thank my colleagues at the department for providing a pleasant working environment. In particular, I thank Eva Hoogland; I enjoyed the many things we did together. I have very much appreciated the friendly atmosphere in room 318, and for this I thank my roommates Raffaella Bernardi, Annette Bleeke, Boudewijn de Bruin, Nikos Massios, Marco Vervoort and Renata Wassermann.

Finally, I would like to mention some people who have been very important to me over all these years: Everdine and Willem Iemhoff, Harry van Baaden, Diedewertje Daams, Joost Joosten, Roderik Lindenbergh, Heleen Smid, but most of all Sebastiaan Terwijn.
