Appendix II Catalogues of objects mentioned in Part I
A  Depictions of pottery production on Attic pots and plaques

In this section I have tried to offer a complete bibliography for every listed object, as far as this is possible. I include every available illustration, so comprising reproductions and non-scientific drawings, but also list unillustrated references, as long as they specifically and explicitly refer to the object in question. See for general literature on these depictions chapter V of the main text, and specifically the footnotes to section V.1. Objects not given any number have been published as depictions of pottery production, but are, in my opinion, at best very unlikely to be so. The list follows a chronological order.

Fragment of a black figure one piece amphora?, Manner of Exekias (or by Exekias himself?), ca. 530.
A potter, sitting on a cushion, who is turning the wheel (visible on the left edge of the fragment). Aside, on the right edge of the fragment, the leg of a standing man.

Athens, National Archaeological Museum, Akropolis collection, Graef no. 856
Fragment of a black figure amphora, unattributed and undated, [but probably ca. 550-525].
A man touching or holding a large pot: possibly a potter shaping an amphora?

Graef and Langlotz 1925-1933, I 103, cat. no. 856, Taf. 55; Scheibler 1979b, 17, 28, n.71.

1 I have not been able to trace ‘M.I. Finley, JAntlre 5170 Vol. 118, 1970, 610’, which is referred to in the CVA. The reference seems to be erroneous in some way.
München, Staatliche Antikensammlung und Glyptothek 1717 (old number (Jahn) 731, previously collection Candelori, no. 357).

Black figure hydria, Leagros Group, from Vulci, 520-510.

The fragmentary shoulder picture shows a pottery workshop, with eight artisans at work, from left to right: a man, sitting on a chair, painting an amphora on his lap; the head of a standing or walking man (body not preserved); a man shaping a pithos (?, or an amphora?) on the wheel; his assistant, sitting on a low bench, spinning the wheel; a walking man, carrying a pithos; an old, bearded man with a stick (the master of the workshop?); a walking man, carrying a heavy bag on his back; a man stoking the kiln on the right edge of the picture. Between the pithos carrier and the old man there are a column, supporting a ceiling which covers the area to its left, and a pithos. The kiln on the right edge of the picture is decorated with a mask. (The main scene below shows Aeneas. On the bottom of the vessel various trade mark graffito have been incised, including one of Johnston’s type 2F.)

Two fragments of a fragmentary red figure cup, Euerghides painter, 510-500.

Craftsmen at work, with a sitting Athena (or possibly her statue?) onlooking. On the left side of the largest fragment, the hand of a sitting man painting a cup on the wheel. Behind him stands a wingless Nike, who is possibly crowning him. A smaller, loose fragment shows a man, sitting on a low stool and working with his hands, which are not preserved. He could be the same figure as the painter of the large fragment, or another sitting painter or potter working at the wheel.

Pl. 30b-c, 31

Fragmentary black figure skyphos, Theseus Painter, ca. 500, from near Veredemmia (Ceglie Messapica, Apulia, Italy).

Main scene on sides A and B: two men preparing potter’s clay (?) and a bystander, possibly supervising, standing next to a herm. The clay is shown as a conical pile, with a different pattern on each side. On both sides, one of the workers is bending down, and has his hands in the pile of clay to his right. The other

2 I have not been able to trace ‘T. Pavlucky, “Les sujets de genre dans l’art grec avant l’époque de l’hellénisme”, Kiev 1897, 165, fig. 82’ referred to in Ziomecki 1975, 147, 161. This old book in Russian does not seem to be available in the Netherlands, Athens and Rome.
worker, behind the pile of clay, is carrying a basket, probably with additional clay, on one side, and gesticulating on the other. Underneath both handles there is a man, sitting on a platform supporting the herm and adding a handle to an amphora, or polishing it (?). Recently, Scheibler has argued that the scenes do not represent potters, but preparations for a religious festival (Scheibler 1995, 110-111; 2000, 27).

Fragmentary black figure skyphos, Theseus Painter, late 6th century, from the city Artemision.
Potters preparing clay: fragmentary remains of two scenes very similar to that on A6. Possibly not potters, but preparations for a religious festival (see Scheibler 1995, 110-111; 2000, 27).

Athens, National Archaeological Museum, Akropolis collection, Graef no. 2570
Two non-joining fragments of a black figure plaque, dedicated by [...]des, ca. 500-490.
One fragment, of the left edge of the plaque, shows the upper part of a sitting man, possibly a potter, working with his hands. A second fragment, of the lower edge of the plaque (somewhere to the right of other fragment), shows the legs of a crouching or sitting man, possibly a painter, decorating (?) a large krater placed on a low elevation. On the floor, in between the man and the krater, stands a small krater or skyphos, perhaps a paint pot.

A man standing in front of a furnace with a high chimney. In between the man and the furnace, on the floor, an unclear rectangular object is placed. The furnace seems to incorporate a large pithos just above its stoking channel. It is probably a forge, and the rectangular object an anvil.

Athens, National Archaeological Museum, Akropolis collection, Langlotz no. 739 (old no. G 41), and added unnumbered fragment.

Three fragments of a small red figure calyx krater, Painter of the Louvre Centaromachy, ca. 440.

Oxford, Ashmolean Museum 526 (old no. G. 287)

Side A: a pottery workshop. From left to right: a man sitting on a chair painting a bell krater he holds with his left hand, supporting it with his leg; a walking man carrying a bell krater (by the handles); a pillar; a man holding up a skyphos with his left hand (his right hand is not preserved); to the right, on the floor, another bell krater. In the background, i.e. presumably on the wall, from left to right, hanging: a cup, a stemmed bowl, a brush case?, a dish or ring, a strainer? (Side B: three standing mantle figures.)

Small fragment of a small red figure amphora, 425-400.
Part of left side and hand of a potter, probably sitting on a low stool or bench (not preserved). He is joining the neck handle to a hydria (or perhaps an amphora?) standing on a potter’s wheel, or possibly he is polishing the pot.

Beazley 1944, 17 (wrongly as krater fragment); Talcott and Philippaki 1956, 28-29, cat. no. 104, pl. 8; Rieth 1960, 42-43, Abb. 63; Ziomecki 1964, 34, n. 29; Metzler 1969, 139, 146, 149; Ziomecki 1973b, 52, n. 11, 72, no. 17; Majewski 1975, 338, n. 5; Ziomecki 1975, 23, 25, 73, 94, 148, cat. no. 6.

Metropolitan Museum, New York (previously sale Hotel Drouot 11/5/1903, no. 131).
Red figure cup, date and provenance unclear.
On the inside: a standing satyr, besides a skyphos on an oven. He is cooking a meal, or possibly (but very unlikely) firing pottery.

Walters 1905, I 216, Fig. 68; Richter 1923, 83.
B A depiction of pottery production on a Boeotian skyphos

In this section I have tried to offer a complete bibliography as far as this is possible. I include every available illustration, so comprising reproductions and non-scientific drawings, but also list unillustrated references, as long as they specifically and explicitly refer to the skyphos.

Athens, National Archaeological Museum, CC 1114 (old no. 2624 (442), previously in the Polytechnion, collection Archaeologike Etaireia)
Black figure (silhouettes) skyphos, 4th century?, from Exarcho (Abai), Lokris.
Pottery workshop: 5 employees in a single scene over two sides. On one side a seated person, perhaps a woman, with a cup in her left hand. With a broom-like object in her right hand, she tries to beat a man, walking away to the left with a stack of skyphoi in his hand. In between both persons, another stack of skyphoi. Above the scene an inscription, ‘ΣΙΒΩΝΚΑΛΩΣ’. On the other side three men: one hanging from the ceiling, held by bands from the ceiling to his arms and legs, and from the floor to his penis. Below him, a man sitting at or on top of a potter’s wheel, holding a skyphos. The wheel is carrying another skyphos, presumably a paint pot with a brush standing in it. The third man, to the right, is probably beating the hanging man with the undeterminable object in his hand, but he might also aim at the sitting man, or both. Below the handle of the skyphos, at the centre of the scene, a shelf (on the wall?) carrying a kantharos and a skyphos.

C Depictions related to pottery production on Corinthian plaques

In this section I have tried to offer a complete bibliography for every listed object, as far as this is possible. I include every available illustration, so comprising reproductions and non-scientific drawings, but also list unillustrated references, as long as they specifically and explicitly refer to the object in question. See for general literature on these depictions chapter V of the main text, and specifically section V.1 with notes 303-306 and 313.4 Objects not given any number could be depictions of pottery production, or have been published as such, but are, in my opinion, at best unlikely to be so. As the chronology of the plaques is not clear, I have listed them by collection (in alphabetical order, Berlin, Antikenmuseum; Corinth, museum at the site of ancient Corinth; Paris, Musée du Louvre) and then by catalogue number of these collections.

Berlin

C1  Berlin F 356-F 609
Two fragments, forming most of a votive plaque.
Man firing kiln, dedicatory inscription ‘ΙΙΟΤΕΔΑΝΑ ΕΜΙ’ (‘I belong to Poseidon’).

Röhl 1882, 7, no. 20.26 (inscription on F 356 only); Furtwängler 1885, I 50, 70 (not recognising join and scene on F 356); Wilisch 1892, 18 (F 609 only); Blass 1899, 66 (inscription on F 356); IG IV, nos. 287 (inscription on F 356), 327 (inscription on F 609); Geagan 1970, 41, fig. 15; 48, cat. no. 15.

C2  Berlin F 414
Part of a votive plaque.
B: kiln (A: Poseidon, inscription ΞΕΝΟΚΛΕΣ, probably the name of the dedicant).

Röhl 1882, 8, no. 20.40 (inscription on A); (Furtwängler 1885, I 54; A only, B not recognised); Pernice 1897, 14; Blass 1899, 65 (inscription); IG IV, no. 315 (inscription).

(Format @ see below at F 937)

(C?)  Berlin F 452 and two unnumbered fragments
Part of a votive plaque.
A: Poseidon; B: Merchantman (ship).

Furtwängler 1885, I 55 (A only); Pernice 1897, 16; Geagan 1970, 47, cat. no. 9.

In this section I offer only selected references to the listed objects. In addition to general publications often cited elsewhere in this Appendix and in my main text, I have included some more specific literature on the object in question and the most easily accessible illustrations. More references to individual items can be found in ABV; ARV² or Jeffery 1990; see also my main text, section VI.3 and notes 482-488. The list follows a chronological order. As the dedicatory texts do not refer to specific qualities of the inscribed objects, nor to the pictures they accompany, I have illustrated only the Penteskouphia plaque D1 and the odd and not well known pyramid D5. More illustrations can be found through my references. Apart from the items treated elsewhere in this Appendix (A2-A3; A5; A9-A10; A14; A16; section C; S4), I have not included the signed pots from the Athenian Akropolis which are likely to be potters’ dedications (see main text, notes 487-488), nor the Penteskouphia plaques with depictions of deities or mythological scenes, most, if not all, of which were probably also dedicated by potters (see chapter IX of the main text, with notes 769-771). Lists of other artisans’ dedications, with references, can be found in Rouse 1902, 58-64; Philipp 1968, 113-114 and Scheibler 1979b. These include both references in ancient texts and preserved objects, mainly stone sculpture.

D2
Kanellopoulos collection, Athens, no. 941
Four handled Boiotian cup, ca. 550, provenance not stated.
Inside: black bands, inscription: ‘ΕΠΙΧΕΜΕΝΕΙΟΙΣΕΣΘΕΙΟΙΣΕΠΕΙΡΙΚΑΛΕΙΑΔΟΡΑ’ (‘Epiche(s) made me to the gods very beautiful gifts’) (outside: geometric decoration).

Maffre 1975, 415-417, Fig. 2; Scheibler 1979b, 15-16, Abb. 6; Jeffery 1990, 435-436, ‘C’.

6 The same applies to a phiale from Eleusis and a cup from the Akropolis (Langlotz no. 1078) referred to by Beazley (ABV, 350) and Webster (1972, 4-5). Both have incised first-fruits dedications, but there is nothing to indicate that the dedicators are potters.
D3
Eretria, Museum?
Rim fragment of a pithos, ca. 550, from the fill of the temple of Apollo Daphnephoros at Eretria.
Plain, except for a snake-like decorative incision and remains of a dedicatory inscription, incised before firing: ‘[…]ΔΡΟΣ ΤΟΙ h[E]ΡΑΚΛΕΙ ΠΟΙΩ[ΣΑΣ ΑΝΕΘΕΚΕΝ?]’ (‘…dros to Herakles (what) he has made [dedicated?]’).

Athens, once collection Karapanos, apparently now lost

Probably 19th-century phrase on a late 5th-century pot (‘lekanis’ or ‘pyxis’) found in Ambelokipi, part of Athens,'ΛΥΚΙΝΟΣ ΑΝΕΘΕΚΕΝ ΤΑΙ ΑΘΕΝΑΙΑΙ ΤΟ ΠΙΡΟΤΟΝ ΕΡΓΑΣΑΤΟ' (‘Lykinos dedicated (this) to Athena, the first he worked’). Doubted ancient by Beazley and others.

Klein 1887, 213; Studniczka 1887, 142; Kretschmer 1894, 197, no. 177; Rouse 1902, 60-61; ARV², 1556; Scheibler 1979b, 16; Williams 1995, 14.
In this section I offer only selected references to the listed objects. In addition to general publications often cited elsewhere in this Appendix and in my main text, I have included some of the most important specific literature on the object in question and the most easily accessible illustrations. More references to individual items can be found in the cited works, particularly ABV, *ARV*² and, for most, the relevant CVA. See also my main text, chapter VIII and notes 712-718. The list follows a chronological order, but keeps the works of single painters together. I have not included a few pots on which the name of a potter or painter is simply coupled to ‘ΚΑΛΟΣ’, ‘beautiful’, since this is a recurring formula which may not be very meaningful. I have illustrated only those items which so some (possible) connection between the depicted scene and the potter who is named in or beside it.
