Although a Ph.D. exercise may be said to be an individual undertaking, it is one that cannot do without the support and participation from many quarters. Such support may take many forms, including financial, material, intellectual and moral among others. It is difficult to mention by names all individuals who contributed to the successful completion of this study, but I would like to assure those whose names I fail to mention that all their contributions in whatever form are all greatly appreciated.

The study was funded as part of a larger research project, by the Netherlands-Israel Research Programme (NIRP). This programme brought together researchers from the University of Amsterdam, the Netherlands, School of Environmental Studies of Moi University in Eldoret, (MUSES), the Blaustein Institute for Desert Research at the Ben Gurion University in the Negev, Israel, and from the African Studies Centre, Leiden, the Netherlands.

First and foremost, I would like to acknowledge the commitment of my two promoters, Professor Ton Dietz (AGIDS, University of Amsterdam) and Professor Jan Hoorweg (African Studies Centre, Leiden) for their outstanding and exemplary professional guidance and supervision. In a way, I attribute the completion of this project to Professor Hoorweg for taking charge of its financial and administrative aspects at a time when it was faced with imminent delays or even possible collapse due to administrative bottlenecks while the project was still at its infancy. In addition, Professor Hoorweg was kind enough to not only introduce me to the analytical programme used in this study, SPSS (Statistical Package for Social Scientists), but he also went further and spent many hours with me behind the computer until I was at home with SPSS. He shaped my analytical skills and attitude towards quantitative data. I benefited immensely from Professor Dietz's experience on pastoralists. His informed critique on various issues and the flow of arguments greatly enhanced the quality of the thesis. I can only admire his detailed criticisms on numerous drafts on fortnightly basis during the writing stage, which kept me on my heels. I am immensely indebted to both of my promoters for their patience in reading and rereading various versions of the text, skilled editing, and their detailed comments on tables and figures as well. Above all, they have always been able to fit me into their busy schedule, often at the expense of their own convenience and that of their families. Besides my promoters, this study benefited greatly from comments and suggestions by friends and colleagues in the NIRP project (Netherlands-Israel Research Project), part of which was constituted by this study. The extensive comments on most of the chapters by Dr. Fred Zaal (University of Amsterdam) deserve particular appreciation, while his work among the Maasai in Kajiado provided me with inspiration and experience on which to draw. Others in the project whose contribution I would like to acknowledge include Professor Allan Degen (Ben Gurion University, Israel), and Professor S. J. Dima (University of Namibia). It is therefore clear that any remaining mistakes, omissions or errors of interpretation are not for want of academic and professional support, but rather my own limitations.

A number of institutions have contributed to this Ph.D. project. I would like to thank the African Studies Centre, the Netherlands, for granting me visiting research fellowship twice during this project (1995 and 1999). I felt privileged, particularly, when my fellowship was extended beyond the stipulated period during my visit in 1999. The management of the ASC and indeed the whole staff made my stay in Leiden comfortable and homely. Although almost everyone supported me in one way or another, I would like to thank Dr. Dick Foeken for his continued interest in my work as the head of my theme group at ASC and for his role in the finalization of the final publication. Dr. Marcel Rutten's encouragement and support was of great importance. The secretarial staff under Marieke did everything possible to see to my comfort. A special word of gratitude goes to Ann Reeves who did the English correction and to Mieke Zwart who took care of all the layout work. Willem for his assistance with computers, and Joop Nijssen for administrative support, are most appreciated. Many of the friends at ASC opened their homes to me during my stay in Leiden. For those whose kind invitation I was unable to honour, I greatly appreciated the same. My gratitude to Panos Institute, London, for allowing me to use part of their data on communication and information flow among the Somali pastoralists, courtesy of Kitty Warnock.

The government was kind enough to grant me the research permit for this study, vide ref. no. ED 12/15 Vol. 1 (216) of 15th Nov. 1995. Various offices that were helpful in retrieving old materials include Kenya National Archives, Ministry of Agriculture and Livestock Development (Nairobi), Livestock office (Garissa), Veterinary office (Garissa) and the District Development office (Garissa), among others.

While in the Netherlands, my colleagues in Ceres have been a source of inspiration as each narrated their field experiences, especially Thera Rasing (ASC), Mayke Kromhout (UvA), Janneke Hulsker (Catholic University, Nijmegen), Gabriel Rugalema (ISS), Adano Wario (UvA), Karen Witsenburg (UvA) and the others. Some friends formed a small Kenyan family away from home; Anne Karanja, Jimmy Ruto, Violette, Ikiara, Nyang, Mohamednoor, Farah, Bull, Wilbur and others at various institutions in the Netherlands. It is amazing how close contact people can keep when in a foreign land. The small get-togethers and the ugali we have had together made me feel at home even at the peak of the winter. Mohamed Guleid and Hassan Deen in Amsterdam, and Esther Mwangi (Indiana University), were among my close friends whose encouragement was always a source of strength.

Back in Kenya, my employer, Moi University deserves my appreciation for granting me study leave and the necessary backing that facilitated the completion of this project. The successive Deans of the School of Environmental Studies, Professor Okidi, Professor Tole, Professor Otieno and Dr. Yabann, have all been supportive throughout. Professor Joshua J. Akong’a of Moi University deserves a special appreciation for his keen interest in my work and for his assistance in the development of the research proposal at the beginning of this project. Colleagues at the School of Environmental Studies have always been helpful and encouraging. The small team of staff and colleagues at the Coast Environment Research Station (CERS) in Malindi have been of enormous support during the many months I spent there working on this project. Munyao, Mary, Tunje and all the others at CERS made my stay in Malindi comfortable. Other friends who assisted me in various ways include Hassan Ngong, Abdullahi Municipal, Said Kachele, Bilacha, Abdirahim Hassan, Hon. Affey, Hon. Shidiye, Noor Sheikh, Hassan Dagane, Guhad (GG), Bashir Abdoow and Abdirahman Omar. Others are Abdi Umar (Kenya Pastoral Forum), Fatuma Abdikadir and Shaur, both of Arid Lands, and Fatumanasri. My field assistants, Mohamed Omar, Omar Bille, Hassan and Naslidi did a superb job under difficult conditions and I would like to thank them sincerely. Above all, my respondents have shown a strong sense of patience in answering numerous questions. The livestock traders, brokers, butchers and the households from Ijara and Dadaab in a way determined the outcome of this study. The hospitality and patience of these poor pastoralists who continued to struggle for survival during a drought and yet not only answered many boring questions but sometimes went further to offer me some chai fills me with a lot of admiration for them.

Members of my extended family played a crucial role in enabling me to pursue this project without much interruption. My brothers Ugas, Ali, Dekow and Abdiwahab, and sisters Asli, Halima, Fatuma and Barey have been wonderful in their support to my family during my long absence. Particularly my elder sister, Asli and her late husband Abdi Ali, have been like second parents to me since my early days in school and I owe them so much. My cousins, Farah Maalim, Yusuf Abdirahman, Hassan Bashir and Hussein Abdirahman have all been supportive in one way or another. My in-laws Shillow, Kilas, Ali, Salatho and the others continued to render moral and material support to my family during this project. Their availability and willingness to help my family with various tasks during my long absence was outstanding and I cannot thank them enough. My wife Athar and children, Asharoon, Mohamednoor, Mulki and Nasrudeen bore the brunt of this Ph.D. They endured my long absence and yet encouraged me on. They provided me with a strong foundation and purpose to succeed in this project. I hope the completion of this project will now make me available to pay them the attention and company that they lacked for more than four years. My parents have been the pillars of this project and strong source of inspiration through their continued support in encouraging me on even when neither of them has ever been to school. They provided me with a strong will to succeed to make up for what they have missed, as my dad often said.
Dedicated to my dad, Arale Nunow, and my mum, Gela Aul, for successfully moulding a scholar out of a potential nomad
