This dissertation was a great experience for me. It is a result of intense collaboration with Michael Frese and Sabine Sonnentag. Both were excellent and stimulating supervisors and the combination of the two was a unique resource of the dissertation. I feel most obliged to Michael Frese, who invited me to work with him at the University of Amsterdam. While he allowed me to work independently and to develop my own approach towards theory and research, he was always open to discuss my ideas. He stimulated me by setting high and challenging goals, and he carefully criticized my early drafts within a very short period of time. Sabine Sonnentag was particularly important in carefully reviewing my research plans and her advice was always an important input to the present dissertation. I wish every graduate student gets this kind of supervisors, which I had in these years.

The first wave of the longitudinal study was based on data from the project “success factors of small and medium sized enterprises” (Erfolgsfaktoren von klein- und mittelstaendischen Unternehmen, EKU). This project was initiated in 1993. I want to thank all former and present members of the project: Michael Frese, Bernard Batinic, Christian Fritschle, Nathalie Galais, Sigrun Goebel, Susanne Heinz, Astrid Kuhlemann, Reiner Rothfuss, Roland Schenk, Andreas Utsch, Panagiolis Venezileas, and Hannelore Wolkewitz. There are still more students who helped in the data collection and rating procedures. Andreas Richter, Petra Paeffgen and Sabine Mihalik were involved in the study when they prepared their master thesis under my supervision. They worked very independently and their enthusiasm and initiative allowed them to do so. I particularly wish to thank the small business owners who invested their limited amount of time to make my research possible.

I gratefully acknowledge the funding provided by the “Landesforschungsschwerpunkt Hessen/Thueringen” and the University of Amsterdam. My department in Amsterdam provided necessary resources and an excellent environment for working scientifically, which made it hard for me to leave them.

Finally, I wish to thank my first roommate Chris Nibbering. He advised and helped me scientifically and socially and he helped me to translate the English version of the summary into Dutch.
