Note of Thanks

This dissertation was made possible by the scholarship of the TMR project “Political Representation and Electoral Behaviour in the European Union” of the Fourth Framework Program of the European Commission. Hermann Schmitt and Andrea Römmele organised this network project of the European Election Study group in which researchers received doctoral students from other “nodes”. The grant enabled my studies at the University of Amsterdam and the Universidad Nacional de Educación a Distancia (UNED) in Madrid – but also included a rich network life with annual conferences at interesting places, yearly winterschools on comparative research in Amsterdam and Louvain-la-Neuve (organised by Cees van der Eijk and Ann-Marie Aisch-van Vaerenbergh) as well as the opportunity to participate in the ICPSR summer programs at the University of Michigan. My studies profited decisively from the many opportunities to meet, to learn, and to discuss research projects and results. I am grateful to all named and unnamed fellows who made this program a success.

In particular, I express my thanks to Hermann Schmitt who has early recognised my interest in European empirical studies and opened many ways to European political research. He steered me to this dissertation. I am grateful for his support and honoured that he is member of the promotion committee.

Cees van der Eijk accepted me as doctoral student at the University of Amsterdam. I could not have had a better promotor. He sensed my major questions and showed me analytical ways to formulate and to answer them. I am indebted to his advice in all aspects of this dissertation and to his personal support and encouragement in uncounted meetings. Thanks to his support, a grant from the Amsterdam School of Communications Research (ASCoR) enabled me to continue my studies at the University of Amsterdam.

The University of Amsterdam and ASCoR provided me with a well-organised work environment that at times surprised me by its modernity and by its changeability. I am grateful to Wouter van der Brug for his methodological advice. I owe thanks to Sandra Zwiers who helped me to manoeuvre the administrative part of the dissertation. Hetty van Kempen did a great job in translating the Dutch summary. I enjoyed European friendship sharing flat and office with Céline Belot from Grenoble. I thereby benefited from the overview of empirical studies on European legitimacy she gives in her dissertation.
My stage at the Universidad Nacional de Educación a Distancia (UNED) in Madrid was supported by Pilar del Castillo. I am greatly indebted to Irene Delgado for her efforts to remove all administrative and organisational obstacles of coming to Madrid. I enjoyed the exchange with colleges that showed me the Spanish point of view in European affairs.

Thanks to Anne Jadot, I could present and publish preliminary results at the Maison Française d’Oxford. Thanks to Alfredo Retortillo, I could give a methodological outline of this dissertation at the V. congress of the Asociación Española de Ciencia Política y de la Administración (AECPA).

I am indebted and honoured by the members of my promotion committee. Max Kaase was my professor for comparative political studies at the University of Mannheim and the supervisor of my master thesis. Klaus Schönbach often enlightened me about the Dutch way of thinking and working. In the colloquium with Jos de Beus I learned about theoretical reflections on European integration. Jean Tillie’s dissertation gave me guidance in setting up a strongly empirically oriented study.

All possible mistakes in this book are in the responsibility of the author. I thank Daniëlle Baylé from AUP who managed the publication of the book.

Writing a dissertation also draws from non-scientific resources. Place is a scarce good in Amsterdam, and I am infinitely grateful to Wouter van der Brug and Diana Hense and their family for hosting me as friend and for explaining me all the peculiarities of living in this town.

This study continued after the scholarship and overlapped with my professional life. I thank my superiors and colleges at ISM Global Dynamics and the ZUMA Social Indicator Department for making allowance for my research.

I am grateful to my parents and my family for backing me up in the times of moving around in Europe. I give my special thanks to Andreas Kluge who accompanied me with his loving care throughout the dissertation and who took the photo for the cover.

I dedicate this book to my late grandmother Dr. Käthe Scheuer née Hey who, with her dissertation on “Analytische Theorie in Systemen hyperkomplexer Zahlen” at the University of Hamburg in 1927, was among the pioneers of female promovendi in Germany. The circumstances at the time prevented her from working scientifically. Thanks to her heritage, I could afford my first computer for studying social and political science.
