Putting errors to good use: error management culture in organizations
van Dyck, C.

Citation for published version (APA):
van Dyck, C. (2000). Putting errors to good use: error management culture in organizations Amsterdam: KLI

General rights
It is not permitted to download or to forward/distribute the text or part of it without the consent of the author(s) and/or copyright holder(s), other than for strictly personal, individual use, unless the work is under an open content license (like Creative Commons).

Disclaimer/Complaints regulations
If you believe that digital publication of certain material infringes any of your rights or (privacy) interests, please let the Library know, stating your reasons. In case of a legitimate complaint, the Library will make the material inaccessible and/or remove it from the website. Please Ask the Library: http://uba.uva.nl/en/contact, or a letter to: Library of the University of Amsterdam, Secretariat, Singel 425, 1012 WP Amsterdam, The Netherlands. You will be contacted as soon as possible.
Acknowledgements

It has been suggested that scholars tend to study those topics they have trouble with in their personal life. This may be true, it may not. What I do know is that I have enjoyed and benefited greatly from the ‘mastery culture’ in our ‘error group’. During the project I have made my share of mistakes, but I think we have always been able to minimize their consequences, and I have certainly learned a lot.

Michael Frese and Sabine Sonnentag are both excellent and stimulating supervisors, the combination of the two is exceptional. Most supervisory meetings were held with both Michael and Sabine as well as all three ‘error PhDs’; Dörte Heimbeck, Dimitri van der Linden and myself. I thank Michael, Sabine, Dörte and Dimitri for the lively discussions, useful comments and suggestions, and support.

I have much enjoyed working at the department of Work and Organizational Psychology at the University of Amsterdam. I have learned a great deal, and have enjoyed many a pleasant ‘borrel’ with the ‘old’ people, the ‘new’ people and the ‘Germans’ who together make the department an inspiring place to work. Many of the fruitful conversations were those with the PhD’s in Carpe Diem enjoying a cappuccino, or in Kriterion enjoying a white beer. Over the years I have shared my office with three strong women: Tjarda van Sliedregt, Sabine Remdisch and Dominique Haijtema. Those were the days...

I would like to thank Harry Garst who has helped me tremendously with working with LISREL. Special thanks go to Jasper Klapwijk, who was able to bear my tendency to challenge deadlines. Up until the very last moment he patiently waited for me to finish a text, or decide to change a table after all, and then, with amazing swift and ease, transformed dull words and figures into a professional looking manuscript.

As this dissertation goes to press, I have set ‘my first steps’ at my new workplace at the Vrije Universiteit in Amsterdam. During the past few weeks I have gotten a ‘taste’ of the culture there, and I must say I like it a lot. I have great confidence that the coming years at the department of Work and Organizational Psychology will be fruitful as well as pleasant. I look forward to working closely together with Paul Koopman and Deanne den Hartog on new projects. Although we have only met recently, my new roommate at the office — Edwin van Hooft — already deserves a thank you. I have bothered him with numerous questions and favors, and he seems to be taking it well so far.

Data described in this dissertation could not have been gathered without the help of many. Among them are students of ‘OP-groups’, and graduate students Els Immink and Lisa de Geus who conducted the interviews described in the third chapter. I would also like to thank the numerous anonymous companies, and managers within them, who sacrificed their time to inform me about their error culture. A special mention goes to MCC, who let me administer questionnaires among the participants in their management game.

Further, I am indebted to David Breashears who has helped me with the copyright of Scott Fischer’s photograph on the cover of this dissertation. I thank Woodfin Camp & Associates for their permission to use this photograph. I also thank
Acknowledgements

Eve Lazovitz from St. Martin’s Press who granted me permission to use the picture at the beginning of the first chapter.

I would very much like to thank the reading committee, consisting of Amy Edmondson, Naomi Ellemers, Paul Koopman, Jaap Boonstra, Tony Manstead and Carsten de Dreu. I am honored by their willingness to serve on the committee, and thank them for their useful comments and suggestions.

My friends have been great throughout the process. They lent an ear in times when my doubts and frustrations were high, offered educated viewpoints from other scientific disciplines, and some were even kind enough to introduce me in their companies for data gathering. Juliette van der Schrier has — together with Esther — done a great job preparing the cover of this dissertation. Thanks! Many thanks go to my paranimfs Gwen de Heer and Julian von Arrendorff. Both are great friends (and family), and provided excellent help with the preparations for the defense. My deputy paranimf Maarten Cornet has helped me with finding a good economical performance measure, and has commented on a previous version of the first chapter. Besides that, he is the best friend one can ask for.

My parents have stimulated me a great deal in working on this project. Furthermore, they have, over the course of the project, read some of the papers I was then working on. It was great to have them provide me with productive feedback, balanced with just the right amount of bias in their judgements to restore my self-confidence when necessary.
Acknowledgements

I also appreciate the interest my in-laws have shown in the progress of the project. I do, however, want to use this unique opportunity to set straight an obstinate mix-up: In fact I graduated over four years ago. (Just teasing).

Although Sven is not always convinced, I do acknowledge and greatly appreciate his mental support. If it is in print, it must be true. WLL.