The syntax and co-occurrence of case functions in Mycenaean texts

Introduction

Our knowledge of Mycenaean verbal morphology and syntax is notoriously defective, owing to the nature of the information in the tablets. Nevertheless, it may be rewarding to sort out what we do have¹. Most of it, to be sure, must be familiar.

The spelling rules complicate the issue:

(i) Ambiguities of spelling

- -a in the first declension may represent nom. sg. f. -ā/-ǎ, nom. sg. m. and gen. sg. f. -ās, dat. sg. -āi, acc. sg. f./m. -ān / f. -ǎn, nom. pl. -ai, acc. pl. -ans; and -a-o both gen. sg. m. -āho and gen. pl. f./m. -āhōn;
- -a in the third declension may represent acc. sg. m./f. and nom./acc. pl. n. -ǎ and acc. pl. m./f. -ǎs; and in the second declension nom./acc. pl. n. -ǎ;
- -o in the second declension may represent nom. sg. m./f. -os, dat. sg. -ōi, acc. sg. m./f. and nom./acc. sg. n. -on, perhaps instr. sg. -ō, nom./acc. du. -ō, nom. pl. m./f. -oi, gen. pl. -ōn, instr. pl. -ois, acc. pl. m./f. -ons;
- -e in the third declension may represent dat. sg. -ei, perhaps instr. sg. -ě or -ē, nom./acc. du. -e, and nom. pl. -es.

§ 1. The syntax of an introductory formula may or may not be continued in the sequel: instead of accusatives, we have nominatives in the PY Ta tablets, in spite of o-wi-de in the introductory clause of Ta 711; in Ta 711 itself, qo-u-ka-ra in .2 and .3 is a nominative form (the other forms in -a are formally ambiguous), and in other tablets of this series ti-ri-po is visibly a nominative; the nominatives are used here just to mention the objects recorded. This ‘mention-use’ of the nominative is known as, i.a., pendent nominative, or nominative of rubric. I shall call it ‘free nominative’; it is frequently found in inscriptions and papyri. Very often, as in the following examples, such free nominatives are used where we might expect an accusative, preceded by a phrase with a transitive verb.²

² Cf. K-G I: 45 f.

(ii.a) Free nominative (PY Ta)

(PY Ta 711.1 o-wi-de , pu₂-ke-qi-ri , ...

/hō wide P^hugeg^wrīns³ .../)

- 711.2-3 qe-ra-na , ... , qo-u-ka-ra
/k^{wh}ernā g^wouk(a)rās/
- 641.1 ti-ri-po , ... *20I^{VAS} 1 (bis)
/tripos/ or /tripōs/⁴
- 709.2 au-te 1
/austēr/
- 709.3 ti-ri-po , ... *20I^{VAS} 1 (bis)
/tripōs/
- 721.2 ta-ra-nu-we , ... *220 3
/t^hrānues/

Likewise, we find the nominative⁵ a-ko-so-ne /aksones/ twice in PY Vn 10, after the introduction o-di-do-si du-ru-to-mo; the case of e-pi-[●]-ta (also twice) cannot be made out, but judging by a-ko-so-ne as parallel entries, it is most likely a nominative too:

(ii.b) Free nominative (PY Vn 10)

- .1 o-di-do-si , du-ru-to-mo ,
- .2 a-mo-te-jo-na-de , e-pi-[●]-ta 50
- .3 a-ko-so-ne-qe 50
- .4 to-sa-de , ro-u-si-jo , a-ko-ro , a-ko-so-ne
- .5 100 , to-sa-de , e-pi-[●]-ta 100 ,

PTT: .1.5 The sign seen in e-pi-[●]-ta in both instances is probably not pu; perhaps cf. *19.

(Palaima: [●] = forma quaedam signi *50 = pu.)

- .1 /hō didonsi drutomoi/ (or /hō didōsi drutomos/) .2 /arm^hoteyōna de epip^huta (?) 50/ .3
/aksones k^we 50/ etc.

A free nominative in front position (“theme constituent”) is probably found on the PY Eb/Eo tablets: X e-ke-qe A PIECE OF LAND, i.e., if -qe is the conjunction /k^we/ ‘and’⁶; that being the case, the subject of the finite verb form e-ke /hek^hei/ is implicit ('he'/'she', being identical with the referent of the preceding free nominative):

³ P^hugeg^wrīns rather than -īs, to my mind; the derived adjective pu₂-ke-qi-ri-ne-ja (TH Of 27.3) had been known for some decades before the dative form pu₂-ke-qi-ri-ne was attested (TH Gp 119.1). The stem-final -n- is of course secondary (nom. -ī-s* → acc. -ī-n*, then -īn-a, cf. τίν-α, Ζῆν-α; hence, the newly formed stem in -n- was generalized).

⁴ The regular outcome of tripods* is tripōs, tripōs being analogical after pōs. (The monosyllabic noun form pōs shows morphological vowel lengthening.)—Hereafter I write tripōs, though the choice is evidently arbitrary.

⁵ In light of the other items discussed here, there is no good reason to assume an innovative accusative plural in -es/, as Risch once proposed (1957-1958).

(ii.c) Free nominative as theme (PY Eb/Eo)

- Eb 566.A ra-ku-ro , e-ke-qe , ke-ke-me-na , ko-to-na , [
/Lak^hulos (e.g.), hek^hei k^we k^hek^hemenān ktōinān/

- Eo 278 ti-qa-jo , po-me , e-ke-qe , dwo , ko-to-no
/T^hisg^waios poimēn, hek^hei k^we duō ktōinō/

Of a different kind is PY Ep 704.5 (vide infra), with a subject nominative followed by two finite verb forms co-ordinated by -qe after the second verb: e-ri-ta i-je-re-ja e-ke e-u-ke-to-qe e-to-ni-jo e-ke-e te-o; depending on the interpretation of *te-o*⁸, e-u-ke-to is followed either by a simple infinitive, or by an accusative plus infinitive.

Nominatives as subject are naturally found in clauses containing a finite verb form (always third person in the tablets), and such clauses are about the best we can hope for in respect of Mycenaean syntax—e.g. verb + subject (nom.) + object (acc.) + predicative complement (if te-ke /t^hēke/ means ‘installed as’; acc.) in o-te wa-na-ka te-ke au-ke-wa da-mo-ko-ro. A number of those finite clauses are subordinate clauses introduced by (j)o- or o-te:

⁶ There are no indications that κε(v), κα of the first millennium BC ever contained a labiovelar, unlike, e.g., Ionic κοτε ~ Attic etc. ποτε, or Thessalian κις, and especially Arcadian υις ~ Attic etc. τις.

⁸ A priori, te-o can represent a dative sg., an old ablative sg. form in -ō with genitive function, an accusative sg., or a genitive or accusative pl.

Sometimes, we find nominatives used as predicative adjuncts, qualifying the subject, e.g., ko-to-no-o-ko and ka-ma-e-u in a number of PY Eb and Ep texts, once or twice accompanied by the participle e-o:

§ 2. Accusatives are mainly used in two functions, both of which occur frequently on the tablets: (1) direct object of a transitive verb (iv.a), occasionally with a predicative complement (iv.b), or with a predicative adjunct (iv.c):

(iv.a) Accusative as direct object and (2) accusative of direction, generally with allative (illative?¹⁰) postposition -de:

(v.a) Accusative of direction (town/village, district, sanctuary, house, workshop)

- Numerous instances of ACC (place) + -de
- Plain ACC is found in some instances, perhaps, when the context sufficiently indicates direction:
 - KN Fp 363.2 da-*83-ja-de / i-je-ro ...
/D. de, hieron/
'to D., to the sanctuary'?
 - KN Fp 1.7 a-mi-ni-so , / pa-si-te-o-i

 - PY Tn v.1 a-ke-qe , wa-tu
/... agei k^we wastu/
'and leads to the wastu'
 - PY Cn 3.1 jo-i-je-si , me-za-na
/yō hiensi Metsānān/
'thus they send to M.'

An accusative of direction usually refers to a place (town/village, district, sanctuary, house, workshop), but we probably also have some instances of a festival word/name; there is nothing amiss with a festival word, if it is used metonymically for the place where the festival is celebrated. The first proposal of this kind concerns e-wo-ta-de, interpreted by Milani (1970: 306) as, perhaps, hewortān de 'to the festival'; the new tablets from Thebes may present two additional examples (po-to-a₂-ja-de and te-re-ja-de in Av 104):

(v.b) Accusative of direction (festival)?

There is also one instance of an accusative of respect:

(vi) Accusative of respect

/tripōs ... apukekaumenos skeleha/

‘one tripod cauldron, its legs burnt off’ (lit. ‘burnt off as to its legs’)

Further, there are some instances of an accusative of time:

- PY Aq 64 ⁽²⁾]-ja , mo-ro-qa , to-to , we-to , o-a-ke-re-se ... ⁽⁵⁾ ku-ru-me-no ,

/totto (or > tosto?) wetos/ is probably distributive: “année après année”
(Lejeune 1979: 212 [Mém. IV: 240])

- PY Ma 365 ⁽¹⁾ ro-u-so ... (COMMODITIES) ⁽²⁾ o-da-a₂ , ka-ke-we , a₂-te-ro , we-to ,

/Lousoi ... hō d’ hā k^halkēwes hateron wetos didonsi/

/hateron wetos/ is either distributive, ‘every other year’, or ‘for a second consecutive year’, sc. if “every other year” was the rule (thus Lejeune 1979: 205 sq. [Mém. IV: 233 sq.]—I am not so sure that this can be inferred from the other tablets of this series), but not ‘next year’ (which would require do-so-si)

Moreover, we have one or two instances of the embedded construction accusative with infinitive, where an accusative functions as subject of the infinitive; there may also be present an object accusative:

(viii) Accusative plus infinitive

- PY Ep 704.5 e-ri-ta , ... , e-u-ke-to-qe , e-to-ni-jo , e-ke-e , te-o
Acc. + inf. if te-o = subj. acc. with e-ke-e; otherwise, e-ke-e is a plain infinitive complement ‘she claims to have ...’; cf. supra, iii.b

¹¹ Cf. AGS 2001: 175. However, po-to-a₂-ja cannot represent /Ptōhia/; rather, po-to-a₂-ja derives from a form Ptōhā*, which could be the name of the district where mount Ptoion is situated.

§ 3. Genitives are most of the time used as adnominal adjuncts (attributive gen.):

However, we also find genitives as regimen of e-ne-ka:

¹² Concerning pu₂, I believe that ‘1 from 3’ (: p^hu, to the exclusion of pu and bu) is likelier than ‘1 out of 3 excluded’ (: pu, whereas both p^hu and bu are possible). ‘3’ = the three possibilities for the general sign pu.

Adverbial genitives of time are also found, serving as datings by month name:

- still enigmatic are: (KN) a-ma-ko-to me-no, ka-ra-e-ri-jo me-no, ra-pa-to me-no, wo-de-wi-jo me-no, where the month names evidently are not in the expected genitive forms in -oio; (partitive) ablatives in -ō are just a possibility.

Bartoněk (2003: 442) also mentions a predicative possessive genitive: pe-se-ro-jo , e-e-si
/Pselloio ehensi/ (KN Ai 63.a), at present the only instance in the Mycenaean corpus, as far as I can see.

§ 4. Datives of lexical items denoting persons most naturally represent recipients (indirect object or beneficiary):

(xii) Dative of beneficiary/indirect object (recipient)

¹³ Either hopā from the root sep-* ('to take care of'), cf. (ἀμφι-)ἔπειν, Lat. sepelire, etc., or opā from the root h₃ep-*, cf. Lat. opus, and perhaps Myc. a-no-po if = /anōpos/ 'unworked' (Waanders, forthcoming).

- Indirect object in a ‘giving’-context:

There are some instances of a final function of the dative, e.g. zo-a /dzohāi/ ‘for boiling’, and, with gerundival (‘dominant’) future participle: a-re-pa-te ze-so-me-no:

¹⁴ The interpretation of *56 as *ko*₂ (= k^ho?), at Thebes at least, is still uncertain.

¹⁵ The occurrence of -ka-ra-na in Mycenaean (in place names like ke-i-ja-ka-ra-na), if = ... krānā ‘well’, ‘spring’, makes the interpretation of ke-re-na-i as /krēnāhi/ ‘to the spring nymphs’ very doubtful. This interpretation was proposed by Ruijgh (2003: 225), who considers κρήνη (Att.-Ionic), κρᾶνᾶ (West-Greek, Arcadian), κρᾶνᾶ (Aeolic) a Prehellenic loan. If the word has anything to do with κᾶρα ‘head’, etc., it must be not a loan but an inherited word, for which we expect Pre-Greek kr(e)s-neh*₂ > Proto-Greek krāhnā* > (most dialects) κρᾶνᾶ, (Aeolic) κρᾶνᾶ (the length of the first α cannot be determined). Attic κρήνη can be explained along the lines of Vendryes (1922) as the result of ā-dissimilation: ...ᾶ...ᾶ > ...η...ᾶ; in Ionic, κρήνη is entirely unproblematic.

Doubtful is the interpretation of the datives as combinations of #RC_a - PC_a or #PC_a - RC_a in the following texts, since there are no satisfactory parallels for such a lay-out in the ‘purpose’ texts known so far:

⁽³⁾ R[C] - RC - R[?](: ḵa-ne-jo, recipient or receptacle?)C ⁽⁴⁾ etc.
#P? (temporal clause) RC - RC - RC - etc.?—cf. the remark on
KN F 51v

/deik^wnōi ... Māi Gāi (?) ... Argodāmōi .../

de-ḡo-no in .1, preceding the temporal clause and the rest of the text, could be a final dative ‘for a meal’; however, if po-ro-de-ḡo-no in KN F 51v is a recipient, ‘vice-de-ḡo-no’, de-ḡo-no here may also be one, say ‘chef de cuisine’.

There is also a dative of time: we-te-i-we-te-i in all 13 lines of PY Es 644, the only temporal dative I am aware of (but Bartoněk 2003: 443 “Z.B.”, suggesting more examples).

§ 5. There probably were separate locative forms in -ai and -oi, distinct from datives in -āi and -ōi, in the singular, although we cannot be absolutely certain. There seems to be no such distinction in the singular of the third declension, nor, obviously, in the plural of all three declensions (-a-i, -o-i, -si for dat. and loc.). I pass the locative in silence.

§ 6. The instrumental case, formally recognizable in the plural (-pi /-p^{hi}/, -o /-ois/ as against dat. -o-i /-oihi/; I believe it is very plausible that Mycenaean still had separate instrumental forms in the singular, too, in -ā, -ō, and -e or rather -ē—which I shall write hereafter—though this cannot be proved: the forms in question can also be datives ‘instrumenti’), may (in theory) have several functions: instrumental stricto sensu, comitative, and ornative¹⁶; the ornative function is abundantly present in the Mycenaean texts, either construed with a verb form (usually a perfect participle), or construed as an attributive adjunct:

Ablative function of the instrumental²¹ cannot be demonstrated with certainty, nor categorically rejected; in phrases like o-pi ... qe-to-ro-po-pi, the instrumental clearly has locative function.

On the other hand, it is not impossible that Mycenaean presents a few ablative forms in -ō < -ōt* (-o’et*), formally identical with instrumental forms in -ō < -oh₁*, but paradigmatically equivalent with the genitive. If instrumental forms could have ablative function, the assumed morphological merger of ablative and instrumental in the singular of the second declension may have triggered the functional merger. This is not the occasion to restart the discussion, however.

¹⁷ Cf. Jones 1958, Heubeck 1966.

¹⁸ A finite form g^weg^winōtoi is more probable than a verbal adjective g^weg^winōtos, which should not have reduplication.

¹⁹ Bartoněk’s “Dat. respectus” (2003: 443) looks like a slip of the key-board (the next section ending with “Acc. respectus”), but apparently is not (B.’s answer to my question at the Colloquium).

²⁰ The plural form may imply that more parts of the chair are meant, e.g., back + side supports.

²¹ Expounded by Ilievski (1961), after Gallavotti and Petruševski.
