ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

Firstly, I thank my supervisors, Prof. dr. Rob van der Laarse and Prof. dr. Ihab Saloul. I thank Rob for taking the initial meeting with me before this dissertation began. He said, “Yes, this is research we need,” and fostered me through the full draft of my proposal. Ihab enthusiastically took on this exploration of heritage in the UAE, coming to visit and travel around the emirates to better understand for himself the circumstances under which I was doing this research and to help me formulate it. I’m grateful for the theoretical insights and practical advice Ihab gave when I wandered off in different directions. One of our stops in Dubai actually inspired the concluding chapter of this research. I’m also honored by the esteemed committee that agreed to read and assess this work and from whose work I have learned much. I thank Prof. dr. Patricia Pisters, Prof. dr. Robin Boast, Prof. dr. Yra van Dijk, Prof. dr. Frederike Pannewick, Dr. Robert Parthesius, and Dr. David Duindam. I am grateful for your time and energy.

While writing is a solitary craft, it is supported by colleagues and friends. Robert Parthesius saw its potential in my research from the start and recommended me to the University of Amsterdam, specifically to my supervisors. He also read several parts of the dissertation, encouraging me to sit down and write, even on the days when it seemed to be just too much information to formulate. I am also grateful for my collaborations over the years with Dale Hudson and Gaelle Duthler, both of whom have taught me so much and are both invaluable colleagues and personal friends. I am grateful for having had the opportunity to have had several conversations with Ella Shohat and Robert Stam, whose work I would like to think I am building upon. I also thank the friends who kept encouraging me to pursue this line of research with their professional insight and advice, including Ode Amaize, Alison Kelly, David Oldenkamp, Nawaf Al Janahi, Marilyn Roberts, Pamela Creedon, Lauren Kata and Jonathan Sharfman. This list would not be complete without Özge Calafato, my partner on so many crazy film adventures in the UAE, including the forming the UAE National Film Library & Archive. I also thank Sascha Ritter, my partner in running the Zayed University Middle East Film Festival for nearly 10 years: The festival enhanced this research, and I couldn't have kept ZUMEFF going without him. When I needed a fresh pair of eyes on the nearly final draft, I knew the person to turn to was my long-time friend and scholar, R. Benedito Ferrão and I am grateful for his depth of knowledge and edits and for the careful reading of every single word.

I thank the residents and citizens of the UAE, who openly shared with me their thoughts and beliefs, as their words validated my own observations and gave me even more to consider in my research. I would also like thank the Emiratis who have made me feel so welcome here for so many years: While this dissertation takes a critical look at much of the heritage narrative and media industry in the UAE, this has also been a welcoming country to me and offered me a better quality of life, particularly in terms of safety, then I had before and thus afforded me the time to write this.

I would like to recognize the brilliant cover design by Rayna Li, a student at NYU Abu Dhabi who took it upon herself to create a cover that captures the essence of the dissertation.

Finally, I thank my family and friends, including my parents, Shafiq and Abla, who believed, whether right or wrong, that education is the key to freedom, human advancement and peace.
