Acknowledgements

After a career of teaching Classics and of executive functions in secondary education, the writing of this doctoral dissertation has given me the satisfaction of returning once more to classical scholarship. I would like to express my thanks to all those who have helped me in this quest.

I am deeply indebted to the supervisor of this dissertation, Prof. Daniel den Hengst, and to its co-supervisor, Prof. Jan den Boeft, for their unselfish commitment of time to make expert and conscientious comments on my work, which matured thanks to the freedom granted to me. I felt both challenged and reassured because of this demonstration of their trust in me.

I am grateful to the large number of scholars who sent me their books and articles, and helped me with their advice. First of all I want to mention Stefania Santelia and Helga Köhler to whom I owe a particular debt of gratitude. At vital moments they helped me to believe that what I had achieved was really worth while, the former by responding enthusiastically to my work, inviting me to Bari and asking me to present it at the 'Decima Settimana di Studi Tardoantichi e Romanobarbarici', the latter by reading and commenting in detail on all of the commentary, and encouraging me to finish it sine afflictione et occupatione.

My thanks to the members of the circle of Latinists in Amsterdam for stimulating discussions at several stages of the book. Caroline Kroon, Rodie Risselada and Josine Schrickx guided me in the field of linguistics (a field in which Harm Pinkster's common sense helped me to contain my aspirations), Wim Remmelink initiated me in prose rhythm, and Jan Bloemendal was my conscience with regard to methodology.

At different times I received support, from Michael Kulikowski and Hans Teitler with historical matters; from Gioia Bertelli, Els Rose and Ko Schuurmans with liturgical issues; from Conchita Fernández, Filomena Giannotti and, again, Els Rose because they presented me with their books; from Oliver Overwien, whose Sidonius is different from mine (making for a lively discussion), and from Ralph Mathisen and Luigi Piacente who contributed, among other things, to the bibliography and to my website about Sidonius (not forgetting that Piacente made me discover Bari). I also gratefully acknowledge contributions by David Amherdt, Harm-Jan van Dam, Alessandro Fo, Isabella Gualandri and Patrizia Mascoli.

I take the opportunity to thank Jean Le Guillou. His book Sidone Apollinaire. L’Auvergne et son temps (Société de la Haute-Auvergne, Collection «Mémoires» 8, Aurillac, 2001) falls outside the strict scope of academic scholarship, but is brimful of inspiration and enthusiasm for its subject matter.

The General Introduction was largely written at the Fondation Hardt in Vandœuvres which provided the perfect environment for thinking and writing. I would like to thank its staff for this inspirational experience.

I am grateful to Bas ter Haar Romeny and Hagit Amirav for having selected my book for publication later this year in the series ‘Late Antique History and Religion’ of Peeters Publishers, Leuven. Already in its present guise the work has benefitted much from the keen expertise of the editor, Gavin Kelly.
Ines van de Wetering corrected my English with professional skill and personal care.

My main debt is to my wife who by her active interest, patience and belief in the ultimate outcome, created the conditions for this undertaking to be possible at all.
