FYI: theory and typology of information packaging
Smit, N.

Citation for published version (APA):

General rights
It is not permitted to download or to forward/distribute the text or part of it without the consent of the author(s) and/or copyright holder(s), other than for strictly personal, individual use, unless the work is under an open content license (like Creative Commons).

Disclaimer/Complaints regulations
If you believe that digital publication of certain material infringes any of your rights or (privacy) interests, please let the Library know, stating your reasons. In case of a legitimate complaint, the Library will make the material inaccessible and/or remove it from the website. Please Ask the Library: http://ueba.uva.nl/en/contact, or a letter to: Library of the University of Amsterdam, Secretariat, Singel 425, 1012 WP Amsterdam, The Netherlands. You will be contacted as soon as possible.
Acknowledgements

Even though you may disagree after reading, before you lies the Most Important Book Ever Written. By Me anyway. It is the fruit of hard labour, and in all its imperfection I am unspeakably relieved to have carried it to fulfilment. The majority of language users associate book with relaxation rather than with stress, and I am glad to become part of this majority once more.

Notwithstanding the impression I may occasionally have made on others, my journey in linguistics fortunately has been as exciting as it has been daunting. It is a journey that would never have commenced without Rob Janson and Casper de Groot. Rob was my teacher of Latin, and his classes on syntax (‘everything can go everywhere, but the inflected verb always comes last’) and morphology (‘Latin has a form for everything’) first awoke my interest in the systematic properties of language. Casper taught the introduction to linguistics in my first year of university. It caused me to switch majors from Italian studies to linguistics, a decision I have never once regretted. He is also the one who supervised my MA thesis and encouraged me to enrol in the MPhil programme in linguistics. Without Casper and Rob, I would probably have ended up a Master of Law: I leave it to the reader to decide whether or not to thank them for their interference.

To Enoch Aboh I owe a debt of gratitude for hiring me as a PhD student in his VIDL-project. I came to respect Enoch as an admirably selfless supervisor and a great linguist who jumps the fence between the linguistic disciplines in a way that is quite inspirational. Not once has he forced his own views upon me, however alien some of my decisions must have been to him. I can only hope that this dissertation is more or less what he had in mind when he hired me. Kees Hengeveld supervised my MPhil thesis and this dissertation, for which I am deeply grateful. It is difficult to say which of his virtues makes him a better supervisor: his uncanny talent to see this one parallel in your data that suddenly makes the whole puzzle come together, or his ability to sit back and not interfere. I have thoroughly enjoyed your guidance, encouragement, and our discussions of linguistic theory and university policy. This book would not have seen the light without you. The members of the committee are thanked for honouring my defense with their presence, as well as for having had the tenacity to plough through my impenetrable use of the English language. Thanks to Mike Hannay, my worst mistakes have not made it to the printed version.
To a number of (international) colleagues I would like to extend a heart-felt word of thanks. Thank you, Michael Cysouw, Holger Diessel, Dan Everett, Robert Van Valin, Katharina Haude, Freek van de Velde, Jan Rijkhoff, Daniel García Velasco, Lachlan Mackenzie, Peter Harder, Kaisus Sinnenäki, Dik Bakker, and those I have failed to list here. Your work and the exciting discussions we have had together at various occasions have contributed substantially to this dissertation, and more in general to the pleasure I took in being a linguist.

People sometimes seem to think that only the socially challenged pursue an academic career. The following individuals are living proof to the contrary, and I thank them for being such inspiring co-workers and cheerful office mates: Rafael Fischer, Aude Laloi, Joke Schuit, Lotte Henrichs, Marian Erkelens, Nivja de Jong, Sebastian Nordhoff, Marina Dyakonova, Esther Parigger, Judith Rispens, Hans den Besten, Bart de Boer and Eva van Lier. A special thanks to Evelien Keizer and Umberto Ansaldo for letting me teach part of their graduate classes. A last salute as well to my colleagues of the works council, in particular Margriet Muris: thanks for years of professional cooperation.

Miriam, I am ever so grateful to have had you as a colleague. Thanks for all the coffee, our talks about linguistics and our joint efforts to revolutionize the FDG formalism. I am looking forward to the appearance of our joint volume Bracketed bureaucracy: a civil servant’s view on Functional Grammar. Margot, you have my lasting gratitude for being my main competition for the title of ACLC’s Chief Cynic, our lunches and walks together, for all your support and understanding, for being my friend and my paranymph today. Jitske, thank you for helping me to put things into perspective and for being such a wonderfully supportive comrade. I am glad to have you at my side today.

Love to all my friends for being so patient with me. It means a lot to me that you have stuck around, even though I cannot have been a bucket of fun these last few years. Things will be better from now on, I promise. To my family, my parents, my brothers and sister: even though I have never quite managed to explain to you what my research is about, know that I could never have completed it without your support. Be proud of this book, as it is in part your achievement, too.

Nina, after studying language for almost eleven years there is only one thing I can say with absolute certainty: it is hopelessly inadequate to express how I feel about you.

Niels Smit
Amsterdam, February 2010