

UvA-DARE (Digital Academic Repository)

Defence counsel in international criminal law

Temminck Tuinstra, J.P.W.

Publication date

2009

Document Version

Final published version

Link to publication

Citation for published version (APA):

Temminck Tuinstra, J. P. W. (2009). Defence counsel in international criminal law. [Thesis, fully internal, Universiteit van Amsterdam].

General rights

It is not permitted to download or to forward/distribute the text or part of it without the consent of the author(s) and/or copyright holder(s), other than for strictly personal, individual use, unless the work is under an open content license (like Creative Commons).

Disclaimer/Complaints regulations

If you believe that digital publication of certain material infringes any of your rights or (privacy) interests, please let the Library know, stating your reasons. In case of a legitimate complaint, the Library will make the material inaccessible and/or remove it from the website. Please Ask the Library: <https://uba.uva.nl/en/contact>, or a letter to: Library of the University of Amsterdam, Secretariat, Singel 425, 1012 WP Amsterdam, The Netherlands. You will be contacted as soon as possible.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

In 2001, I became an intern at the Public Prosecutor's Office in Tokyo to understand how the conviction rate in Japanese criminal proceedings could be nearly a hundred percent. It stirred up my interest in the position and role of defence counsel in criminal proceedings and their influence on the outcome of those proceedings. Japanese criminal law, like international criminal law, consists of elements of different legal traditions. Therefore, I felt very lucky to get the opportunity to conduct research on the position of the defence in international criminal proceedings a good year later.

This research came about with the support of the Netherlands Organisation for Scientific Research (NWO), the University of Amsterdam Criminal Law Department Fund, the foundation Stichting Dr. Hendrik Muller's Vaderlandsch Fonds and the Amsterdam University Fund.

That I never got weary of conducting the research for this book for a single moment, I owe to all the people who supported me throughout these years. Since it is impossible to thank everyone personally, I will single out a few.

Harmen van der Wilt brought up the original idea to research this subject and inspired me from the very beginning up until the end. Thanks to him, the smell of pipe smoke became a stimulant for academic discussion. Our discussions were often heated, but were always resolved in a pleasant way. Göran Sluiter's enthusiasm for academic research was contagious. While enjoying sumptuous hamburgers in the Atrium, he encouraged me to publish. It gave me something to look forward to that was not as remote as this book. In the early stages of this research, Eugène Sutorius gave me the confidence to follow my own path.

Yale Law School I would like to thank for giving me many opportunities as a visiting researcher, such as experiencing the inspirational atmosphere of faculty staff discussions of each other's work by the fireside of the Faculty Room. It was a truly academic adventure. To discuss my research with Mirjan Damaška whose book 'The Faces of Justice and State Authority' has been a cornerstone of this research project was an honour and inspiration. Jessica Knouse, Nelcy Lopez de Cuellar, Patricia Egli and Tally Kritzman I thank for our lovely pumpkin and turkey dinners and all American pancake breakfasts. They made New Haven feel like home.

I benefitted from the help of Catina Tanner from the Communications Office of the International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia, the librarians from the Peace Palace Library, from the Library of the Law School of the University of Amsterdam and of the Lillian Goldman Law Library at Yale Law School, from the staff of the Max Planck Institute for International Criminal Law in Freiburg im Breisgau, and the Institute of Advanced Legal Studies in London.

Howard Morrison enabled me to get a proper view of the practical functioning of defence counsel in international criminal law by showing me around and introducing me to many people in Arusha, Tanzania, at the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda. I thank him even more for his infinite commitment to making language corrections to this book. To his colleague John Pini QC who assisted him in this time-consuming undertaking, I am also grateful. And I would like to express my thanks to all those who were willing to be interviewed in Arusha in October 2004 and to the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda for welcoming me as a visiting researcher.

For their helpful and perceptive comments on the penultimate manuscript of this book I am indebted to Bert Swart, Salvatore Zappalà, Guénaël Mettraux, Taru Spronken and André Nollkaemper.

The members of the department of criminal law of the University of Amsterdam brightened up the gloominess of the E-building of the Poort. It was impossible to walk past Henna Redan's open door or little mirror without a good chat or at least a big smile while she was on the phone. It was a pleasure to share a room with Ruth Kok and Frederiek de Vlaming, who liked alternating working hard with efficient tea times as much as I did. It was also inspiring to work with them for the Dutch foundation Lawyers for Lawyers. Annemieke van Verseveld was my ideal neighbour at the Poort where we shared innumerable enjoyable lunches. While I lived in New Haven and she in New York, we would make sure to meet and combine business with pleasure. Not only did we become neighbours again in the Westerpark, we also became good friends with a mutual interest in criminal law and pilates. Thanks to all my colleagues, I will always feel welcome to return to academia.

'Maïos', Esther, Britta, Floor, and Fleur, as they too were engaged in a long-term research project, it was invaluable to share all the ups and downs of my project with them, always combined with wining and dining or even Sinterklaas. Floor and Britta will know that it is not just for their matching 'poodle' hairstyles that they are my 'paranimfs'. Both of them gave me the confidence that one day, this book would be finished so that we would once again be able to spend our weekends and evenings outside the library or the friendly Prentenkabinet.

Charlotte van Herwaarden, Marije Stofregen, Wieke van der Linden and Mirjam de Mol I thank for their continuous support and friendship. They proved the necessity of maintaining a lifeline with the world outside of academia.

I am indebted to my parents, my brother Hinne, and my grandmother Pé who have never ceased to support and encourage me throughout my life.

Micha has been my first and foremost inspiration to do what I aspire, at any level. For that and the incredibly delicious meals he cooked while I was working on this book – 'egg Florentine' became a regular breakfast – I can never thank him enough.

Amsterdam, October 2008