Youth, citizenship and online political communication
Ward, J.R.

Citation for published version (APA):
Ward, J. R. (2009). Youth, citizenship and online political communication

General rights
It is not permitted to download or to forward/distribute the text or part of it without the consent of the author(s) and/or copyright holder(s), other than for strictly personal, individual use, unless the work is under an open content license (like Creative Commons).

Disclaimer/Complaints regulations
If you believe that digital publication of certain material infringes any of your rights or (privacy) interests, please let the Library know, stating your reasons. In case of a legitimate complaint, the Library will make the material inaccessible and/or remove it from the website. Please Ask the Library: http://uba.uva.nl/en/contact, or a letter to: Library of the University of Amsterdam, Secretariat, Singel 425, 1012 WP Amsterdam, The Netherlands. You will be contacted as soon as possible.

UvA-DARE is a service provided by the library of the University of Amsterdam (http://dare.uva.nl)
Acknowledgments

There are a number of individuals who have helped make the completion of this project possible. First I would like to thank Kees Brants, my promoter. More than seven years ago, Kees was the academic advisor for my MA degree. Since then he has paved the way for numerous teaching and research prospects. Far beyond his job description, he also intervened on the many occasions I struggled with resident permit issues. Nick Jankowski, my co-promoter, connected me with the Internet & Elections project and publication opportunities. He always pointed me in the direction of traditional academic writing, standing up to my urge to tend towards first-person style and embellished phrases. I’m sure he will notice my excessive use of adjectives here. Kees and Nick provided excellent supervision. They have both watched my research interests change and evolve and have had the patience to let me find my own way.

The Internet and Elections Project and the CIVICWEB Project offered valuable data and connected me with an international network of scholars. At ASCoR, I attended two PhD clubs for a number of years, headed by Sally Wyatt and Jochen Peter. Within this structure I received valuable insights from my peers. In 2005, I spent five weeks at the Oxford Internet Institute, working with Stephen Coleman on a number of projects related to the UK general election campaign. Stephen provided a great deal of inspiration, connecting me with individuals that would later pave the way for scholarly collaborations as well as interview contacts. I would also like to thank those individuals, from various organizations across the UK, for taking the time to talk to me and help me better understand their work. Andreas Schuck, my crash course co-lecturer and co-author on the death row paper, has often helped remind both of us why we love research. Moira Mezas has been a dear and supportive friend, and also provided a top-rate translation for the Dutch summary. It is no exaggeration to say that Joanne Cantor, my mentor from undergraduate days in Madison, Wisconsin, is the reason I ended up in Amsterdam and in academia.

Isidro provided unmatched help, both listening to writing angst and offering pragmatic solutions in difficult times. He also presented me with a great workspace where most of the manuscript was written, which saved my back and facilitated my progress. Last but not least, my parents have been there every step of the way with unconditional support, encouragement and patience. Whenever the going got tough, my mom’s face would appear in my head and repeat the stern words I heard her utter on a number of occasions: “Finish your PhD!”