About the author

Jolanda Habraken (1976) graduated in 2000 in Biomedical Health Sciences at the Radboud University Nijmegen. She obtained her Masters degree in both Epidemiology and Evaluation of Health Care.

After graduation, she worked at the Department of Social Health Care of the Erasmus University in Rotterdam for two years. She worked on the evaluation of the national screening program for cervical cancer. In this function, she could combine both specializations of her Masters.

After this, she worked at the Netherlands institute for health services research (NIVEL) in Utrecht for a year, evaluating a special fund for GPs working in socially deprived areas in the Netherlands. In this position, she first got acquainted with qualitative research methods and with the interesting topic of vulnerable people.

In 2003, she started working at the Academic Medical Center in Amsterdam, at the Department of General Practice. The results of this research are described in this thesis. During this research project, she once again focused on a vulnerable group of people, and specialized further in qualitative research methods by conducting qualitative research herself (as well as quantitative research) and by participating in the AMC Network for Qualitative Health Research (currently called AMcKOG).

From November 2008, she is working at the Academic Research Centre for Health and Social Care (Tranzo) at Tilburg University. As an action-researcher, she is working on the evaluation of a project that aims to enhance the participation of vulnerable people in four areas in the province of Noord-Brabant, the Netherlands. In this project, she combines her interest for research methodology and vulnerable people.
