ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

Sophocles wrote that men cannot say whether their life was blessed or not until their last day. Although this is certainly true, without waiting for that moment of final summary, I have no hesitation to affirm that studying at the University of Amsterdam was one of the most fortunate events of my life. I had the opportunity to study and conduct my research in a culturally open environment of outstanding scientific quality and, above all, I had the privilege of having Frans van Winden as supervisor. Words fail to express my gratitude for the long hours he spent to improve my research and for being always available anytime I needed him. I have learnt from him much more than economics. He represents for me a model of scholar, teacher and person that I wish to be able to follow.

Coming from a distant place, quite different from Amsterdam for many aspects - weather in particular – I could have felt lonely. That did not happen because I was adopted by a new, very special, family named CREED. There, I have learnt how hard work and commitment to research can also involve a gratifying social life. Arthur Schram was for me like an elder brother you can always count on for good advices. With Frans van Dijk, Jan Potters, Jörgen Wit and Joep Sonnemans I had very pleasant and stimulating discussions covering a variety of matters that often showed me new interesting perspectives. Eric Drissen was very kind to assist me in many ways, especially in the first period of my doctoral studies. I am also indebted to Randolph Sloof who read my work and provided many helpful and insightful comments. I was very happy to share the room with Theo Offerman. I am very grateful for his patience and for the several pleasant dinners at his home. He will always be an “old giant” for me.

I have wonderful memories of the time spent with Nina Budina, Claudia Keser, Jenny Ligthart and Mark Olson who also helped me through the inevitable difficult moments. A special thank goes to Euro Beinat and his wife Lorenza and to Merijn Zondag for the true friendship and generosity they never fail to show. My research benefited a great deal from the generous encouragements of Emilio Giardina, Ilde Rizzo and Giacomo Pignataro. Giusi Santagati gave a precious help for the editing.

Finally, thank you Anna for your loving support and for having made me a better person.
