

UvA-DARE (Digital Academic Repository)

Constructing history, culture and inequality : the Betsileo in the extreme Southern Highlands of Madagascar

Evers, S.

Link to publication

Citation for published version (APA):

Evers, S. (2001). Constructing history, culture and inequality : the Betsileo in the extreme Southern Highlands of Madagascar

General rights

It is not permitted to download or to forward/distribute the text or part of it without the consent of the author(s) and/or copyright holder(s), other than for strictly personal, individual use, unless the work is under an open content license (like Creative Commons).

Disclaimer/Complaints regulations

If you believe that digital publication of certain material infringes any of your rights or (privacy) interests, please let the Library know, stating your reasons. In case of a legitimate complaint, the Library will make the material inaccessible and/or remove it from the website. Please Ask the Library: <http://uba.uva.nl/en/contact>, or a letter to: Library of the University of Amsterdam, Secretariat, Singel 425, 1012 WP Amsterdam, The Netherlands. You will be contacted as soon as possible.

From 1989-1999, the author conducted research and field work among the Betsileo people of the extreme Southern Highlands of Madagascar. Until recently, this region was virtually unknown and considered to be a no-man's-land. Historical archives described the area as a frontier, settled in the early twentieth century by ex-slaves.

These first migrants, as it turned out, had succeeded in implanting a myth of themselves as tompon-tany, or “masters of the land”, by building tombs and creating a land monopoly.

The tompon-tany relied upon a trilogy of tombs, kinship and ancestors, coupled with a skilful deployment of “Malagasy customs” to reinforce their legitimacy and to exclude later settlers. Some of these migrants were labelled andevo (“slave” or “slave descent”). The tompon-tany prohibited the andevo from owning land, and thereby from having tombs. As a tombless people, the andevo were socially ostracised and economically marginalised. They were olona maloto, an “impure people”.

This is the story of the tombless andevo, and how their ascribed impurity and association with infertility, illness, death and misfortune made them an essential part of the tompon-tany world-view.