Preface

A project of this magnitude requires special mention of the many people who contributed to this effort in one way or another.

First of all, I want to thank my supervisors, Clara Mulder and Lia Karsten. Clara and Lia have always been very approachable and responsive to my research questions and dilemma’s. The curious and enthusiastic attitude of Clara towards my project was essential for its ultimate success. Lia made me part of her inspiring way of doing qualitative research in human geography.

Basic inspiration for this book came from the interviews with the commuter couples who made time for me in their busy schedules, and who generously provided me with a look into their personal lives. I am grateful for their participation in this project.

Many others from inside and outside the Amsterdam Institute for Metropolitan and Development Studies (AMIDSt) have contributed to my project and my personal development. Joos Droogleever Fortuijn taught me the ins and outs of interviewing. Len de Klerk has been a valued advisor on a number of occasions; especially during my period with Rootilijn. The participants in several reading- and discussion groups have provided valuable feedback on my papers.

For me, the years of working on my thesis were anything but lonely. This undoubtedly relates to the numerous friends I made through my work at the university. Roommates, next-door neighbours, colleagues I ran into at the coffee corner (or on my way over there), and people I met through Rootilijn, all provided me with the much needed balance between research and personal interaction. Of the many colleagues that made my time at the university into a memorable period I want to specifically mention Rogier, Amanda, Albertine, Els, Edith, Joram, Marlies, Melika, Stan, Perry, Fenne, Aslan, Tineke, Thea, and Sabine.

The last months of finishing the manuscript and turning it into a published book have been an especially intense period. I want to thank my friends and family for their support and patience during this period. This thesis actually became a real book thanks to Guillermo Dazelle’s graphic design. Tillie was an enormous support on Wednesdays. I thank my new colleagues at the SCP for their interest and support. Special thanks goes out to Edith de Meester and Rogier van der Groep who are both such good friends that they agreed to be my paranimfs. Finally, this work would not have been done without the inspiration and confidence provided by Hugo Golsteijn, and the cheerful presence of Floris.
