Many people have been essential to this achievement. At home, my mentor Professor Thavitong Hongvivatana, who first initiated me into the field of health social science has given me constant intellectual and moral support, encouragement, and guidance. I have been deeply inspired by his wide-ranging scholarship, integrity and dedication. The opportunities he always gives to me have allowed me to grow and develop as I am. Without his generosity my long journey would not have begun.

My deepest gratitude is to Professor Pieter H. Streefland, my promotor, who first introduced me to the international intellectual landscape and has never tired to support me since. His thorough scholarship has deeply impressed me. His patience, encouragement, warm spiritual support, caring, and intellectual guidance, especially during my stays in Amsterdam, have made the completion of this thesis possible. I also feel a deep sense of gratitude to Dr. Anita P. Hardon, my co-promoter, for her constant intellectual and spiritual support, caring and concern. I wish to extend my deep gratitude to Professor Sjaak van der Geest for his critical advice and comments, encouragement and hospitality.

My long journey would not have been possible without the critical support from my family, friends, and colleagues. To my father whose life was for nothing but his children and who had long hoped for my achievement; to my mother, an ordinary woman whose love to her children has never receded; to my elder brother, Sakchai, who always gives to me. To my brothers and sisters for their love, moral support and concern. To my wife, Kanjana, and my daughters, Paan and Por, for their gifts of inspiration, love, compassion, caring and patience. Their endless love and understanding have allowed me to finish this study.

In Amsterdam, I was very fortunate to have many great friends and colleagues. I take this opportunity to thank Apiroom Janhom, Banthit Thamprajamchit, Kornkanok Inkaninan, Pensri Kaweewongprasert, Supap and Fred Gales, Sermmsri, Trudie Gertis, Tereza, Ruth, Ilse, Anna, and Huub, for inspiring and supporting me when I was discouraged. To Irene Stengs and her family- Jaroen, Rosa and Max, for their love, hospitality and friendship. To Marie-Tress for her generous assistance, friendship and warm hospitality. To Amanda le Grand, my first Dutch colleague, who brought me a chance to enter a new horizon of intellect.

The success of this study is credited to my research team: Penchan Pradabmuk, Rujinart Athasith, Sorachai, Chamneandamrongkarn, Poo, Toon, Aad, Nok, Pat, Puangchompoo, and Somrak (Mam). The dedication and devotion of Pibool Kamolpeth to his work and chaow-bans (villagers) gave me a deep inspiration. I take this opportunity to express my thankfulness to him.

I owe the largest debt to all the villagers who never refused to welcome us when we intruded their lives without their invitation. Their kindness, generosity and patience in telling their lives and stories which have opened my eyes to the world of the marginalized are deeply thankful. I dedicate this work to them.

Financial support from the World Health Organization, the Health System Research Institute of the Ministry of Health in Thailand, the Center for Health Policy Studies of Mahidol University, the University of Amsterdam and the Hubrecht - Janssen Fonds has made this study and the writing of the thesis possible. I want to express my deep gratitude to these institutions.
