This dissertation took a long time to complete; longer than ever imagined or expected. Throughout the nine years it took me to finish this thesis, a great number of people helped to make this research possible.

The Amsterdam School of Social Science Research (ASSR) generously financed my PhD and also provided a welcoming and intellectually stimulating environment. I am especially thankful to Hans Sonneveld for his unlimited patience and support. I thank Jose Komen, Teun Bijvoet, Miriam May and Anneke Dammers for being so helpful and for creating such a warm and friendly atmosphere. I also want to thank the NWO/WOTRO for the financial support that allowed me to undertake my follow-up research.

I am greatly indebted to my thesis supervisors, who have had the patience and endurance to keep me on track during this journey. I thank my Promotor Mario Rutten for having the courage to step into this project and for providing me with intellectual inspiration as well as useful practical advice. I am also thankful to Leo Douw for his perceptive comments and intellectual support. My gratitude also goes to Henk Houweling for reading and commenting on my work over the past ten years.

I am indebted to all the respondents in Macau and in Lisbon who were willing to give their time to make this research possible. I am equally indebted to all the people who kindly introduced me to them. I mention especially Fernando Lima, José Luís Sales Marques, João and Luisa Guedes, Kwan Fung, Bill Chou, Lina Ferreira, Mariana Palavra, Carlos Morais José and Anabela de Pablos. I would also like to thank Tai Kin Ip and the people at the Research Department of the MES in Macau for their kind assistance. I have greatly benefited from the comments of Professor Wong Siu-lun, who received me in 2002 and shared his insights over Macau with me, for which I am very grateful. A very special thanks to Sofia Bastos and Isabel Castro, who went all the way to help me in my research during my stays in Macau; their hospitality, generosity and friendship made me feel completely at home in Macau. Thanks also to Goreti Lima, Vanessa Alves, Joana Simões, Jorge
Mesquita, Carlos Madaleno e Rui Rasquinho for their incredible hospitality and the great times spent at the Casablanca cafe.

In Amsterdam, I have enjoyed many lively discussions and good laughs with colleagues and fellow PhD students. I want to thank Antonio Carmona Baéz, Daniel Gomez, Laura van Rossem and Marleen van Ruijven, who witnessed the very early stages of my research and who have become my friends in the course of time. Thanks to my colleagues at the ASSR: Eric Ansah, Damien Raess, Song Ping, Zé d’Abreu, Irfan Ahmad, Francio Guadeloupe, Martijn Oosterbaan, Miryiam Aouragh, Christian Broer, Rachel Spronk and Lizzy van Leeuwen. Not only colleagues but also good friends: special thanks to Courtney Lake, Marieke Riethof, Marianne Franklin, Pia di Matteo, Anouk de Koning, Yatun Sastramidjaja, Eileen Moyer, and Kamenko Bulic for all the support in bad times and for all the fun in good times. Marcel Maussen accompanied me for most of this period and shared many of its good and less good moments and I thank him for his friendship, critical comments and wonderful cooking.

I have been fortunate to have had good friends who have kept me grounded and supported me in various ways during this marathon. Special thanks to John Jaques for the love and support in the last months. Thank you Andrew Ward, Maria João Bernardo, Ana Felgueiras and Elizabete Vilar for the encouragement along the way, and especially Elizabete’s patience in reading my earlier manuscripts. I also thank those who have helped to actually complete this book. Miguel Moore edited my English on earlier chapters and Virginie Duhamel edited the maps. Courtney Lake did the final round of English editing and Anouk de Koning translated the thesis’ summary into Dutch. I also thank Annie Novacescu and Christopher Helbig for checking all the references.

Finally, a most important acknowledgement: my father António Trigo de Sousa, my sisters Carolina and Ana Madalena and my brother Luis. I thank them for all their generosity, unconditional support and friendship. I dedicate this work to them and to the memory of our mother Alice.
