A phase-based approach to Russian free word order
Dyakonova, M.

Citation for published version (APA):
Table of contents

Acknowledgements

CHAPTER 1. INTRODUCTION

1.1 An overview of Russian morphosyntax

1.1.1 Basic word order

1.1.2 Case

1.1.3 Tense, Aspect, and Mood

1.1.4 Negation

1.1.5 Question Formation

1.1.5.1 Yes/No-questions

1.1.5.2 Wh-questions

1.2 Information Structure primitives

1.2.1 Topic

1.2.2 Focus

1.2.3 Contrast

1.3 Theoretical background

1.3.1 Phase-based derivations, parallel chains, and locality

1.3.2 Feature checking: Pesetsky and Torrego (2007)

1.3.3 Accommodating [Topic]/[Focus] within Minimalism

1.4 Structure of the thesis

CHAPTER 2. THE BASIC STRUCTURE OF THE RUSSIAN VP

2.1 What is the ultimate position of the verb in Russian?

2.1.1 Adverb placement

2.1.2 The syntax of Russian Aspect

2.1.3 Reconciling the two facts

2.2 Base positions of arguments

2.2.1 Bailyn’s (1995) analysis and the challenges it faces

2.2.2 Motivating IO > DO configuration

2.2.3 Applicative Head approach to Russian DOC

2.2.4 Case checking

2.3 Summary

CHAPTER 3. WORD ORDER AND INFORMATION STRUCTURE IN RUSSIAN: THE DATA

3.1 Some general rules of IS-based sentence structuring in Russian

3.1.1 O-preposing: SOV, OSV, OVS

3.1.2 S-postposing

3.1.2.1 (O)VS

3.1.2.2 VOS

3.1.2.3 VS(O): Narrative Inversion
3.1.3 Summary of structure-IS pairings 63
3.2 Some peculiarities of word order in Colloquial Russian 64
  3.2.1 Tests for distinguishing different types of Focus: narrow versus wide,
      New Information versus Contrastive/Exhaustive 65
      3.2.1.1 Projection possibilities of the preposed focus in CR 68
      3.2.1.2 Semantic effects of focus preposing in CR 70
  3.2.2 What triggers focus preposing in CR? 72
  3.2.3 Middle-field versus left-peripheral focus 76
  3.2.4 Prosodic properties of the preposed focus 78
  3.2.5 Summary of structure-IS mapping in CR 82
3.3 Conclusion 82

CHAPTER 4. SETTING THE SCENE: RAISING QUESTIONS
AND SEARCHING FOR ANSWERS 83
  4.1 What are the limits to IS as the driving force of movement
     in Russian? 84
      4.1.1 Scrambling as EPP satisfaction 84
      4.1.2 Against Inversion in Russian 86
      4.1.3 How much of pragmatics, how much of syntax? 88
      4.1.3.1 Are there oblique subjects in Russian? 88
      4.1.3.2 What is the position of the clause-final subject? 93
  4.2 How and where do things scramble? 98
      4.2.1 Cartographic-like approach: King (1995) 98
      4.2.2 IS-interface oriented non-cartographic approaches 100
      4.2.2.1 Slioussar (2007): from Topic/Focus to accessibility 101
      4.2.3 PF-oriented approaches 103
      4.2.4 Assessment 105
      4.2.4.1 Slioussar’s (2007) model as compared to the present proposal 108
  4.3 Focus preposing: does it exist? 110
      4.3.1 Against focus movement: Junghanns (2001), Pereltsvaig (2004) 110
      4.3.2 What moves after all? 112
  4.4 Scrambling and binding 114
  4.5 Conclusion 121

CHAPTER 5 THE SYNTAX OF TOPIC AND FOCUS IN RUSSIAN 123
  5.1 Introduction 123
  5.2 IS encoding within CP 125
      5.2.1 Background 125
      5.2.2 Structuring the Russian CP 127
      5.2.2.1 Topicalization 127
      5.2.2.2 Focalization 140