Acknowledgements

Even though many PhD theses have lengthy acknowledgements, the idea persists that a PhD is a lonely process. This is very untrue. This PhD has become what it is by the very fact that I have been surrounded by people who have actively, directly or indirectly contributed to it. First of all I should mention the people with whom I worked and lived in Woe, Akosua Village and Half Assini, as well as in Accra, Lomé, Kpeme, Anecho, Cotounou and (indirectly) Abidjan. I would like to thank all the fishermen and women, leaders, elders, priests, chiefs, government officials who have spared their time and experiences with me, trusted me and of which some were willing to share part of their lives with me. Some people questioned what was in it for them and why they should spend time talking to a stranger. I must admit that the benefits have only been, and most likely will remain, few and far between as that is the nature and pace of applying scientific knowledge. I would like to thank everyone for their contributions to this PhD thesis and for all the other things I learnt from you in the process.

Akpe ka ka ka ka!

Special thanks are due to everyone who made me feel at home in the research locations of Woe, Akosua Village and Half Assini. These include my co-residents at the Woe compound where John was based, behind Agric. Thanks for your hospitality, for teaching me how to grind pepper and tomatoes, how to fetch water from the well, how to sweep properly and for killing the scorpions. Thanks to Beauty and her daughters in Akosua Village for taking Anthony and me in as guests to your house, for the splendid and plentiful meals and for patiently answering our questions. Thanks also to Isac and his wife in Half Assini. It was wonderful how you took Sesime and me into your house without really knowing us, furnishing us with great facilities and allowing us to take part in your life. You allowed us to see everything and ask all the questions we wanted to. I still remember our goodbye. Akpe ka ka ka ka! Special thanks are also due to Andy Korkor in Woe, to Gabriel Afadzinu in Akosua Village (and Woe). Both of you were my guides to the Anlo culture, to understanding what fishing is all about and to the ‘real’ stories. Thanks for your trust and openness. I would also like to thank Mr Smiles from Winneba. I cherish my lengthy conversations during which we discussed my fieldwork experiences. Since he had lived in the States, we enjoyed discussing the clichés that exist based on a comparison between Ghanaians and ‘the West’. I explained how I admired the aura of strength, pride, health, and happiness often combined with remarkable beautiful clothing of many people in the ‘poor’ villages in which I performed my research. I would compare that to how people in ‘the West’ could walk with their shoulders down, tucked into their thick coats, looking grumpy, stressed and minding their own business. Mr Smiles would then respond by explaining his hypothesis on solar energy and auras, an idea which I became increasingly in favour of once I was back in the Netherlands! Thanks also to the owners of Abutia Guesthouse in Woe, the nice little restaurant Happy Meal in Woe and Lagoon Lodge in Winneba.

Secondly I would like to thank my research assistants: John, Anthony, Patience and Sesime. Many thanks for your help and for ‘being my ears and mouth’. Thanks John for providing me (and my guests) with a home in Woe and for your efforts such as going to Togo and Ivory Coast. Thanks Patience for your willingness to work with me in the summer of 2004 even though you had a fulltime job. Your participation in this research came at the right time, and your in-depth knowledge and research experience were much appreciated. Thanks also for introducing me to Sesime. Sesime, thanks for your hard work. I enjoyed working with you. Anthony, I am truly happy we met. I cherish the time we worked together in Akosua Village. You really grew into the role of researcher. Many thanks for fulfilling the role of teacher and for teaching me Ewe (I still listen to your shoe song) and about life’s lessons, thanks for your jokes (‘Ah Afì, don’t you like the African music?’ – when you saw my face while we were eating the small lagoon crabs) and, above all, for becoming a friend.

In Ghana, Ben and I lived in a beautiful house in Kokomlemle. However, we were only able to find that house thanks to the help of Adwoah and Kojo Sennah to whom we were introduced by Jojada Verrips. Thank you all. Kokomlemle became a true home to us. Our time in Kokomlemle would not have been the same without Okuleh. Okuleh, thanks for making it our home and for always being there. Ben and I still think back fondly to drinking Star at the gate with you, Robert and Eva and to meeting your family. Dear Lothar and Deanne, Suzanne and Tim, Eveline and Maurice, Tycho and Lucienne, Silke, Suzanne and Aubert, Mark and Pernille – Ben and I are happy we met you guys in Ghana and enjoy the old memories (Akosombo, Konkrobite, Anomabo, tennis, Opèl club and many dinners). Special thanks are due to Lothar and Deanne for welcoming us to Ghana when we arrived, for helping us out with housing and introducing us to so many people. And to Eveline who so generously lent us her car despite hardly knowing us in the beginning. And to Suzanne and Silke with whom I spent most of my free time during the second fieldwork period. Thanks also for giving me a home in Accra. Eveline and Lothar, it was inspiring to have fellow PhD researchers close by in the field. Special thanks are also due to Tjalling Wiarda for helping us out in the beginning with Ben’s jobs and for the fun evenings and nights out in Accra. Thanks also to Martin Ryan.

I am grateful to Dr Manuh for granting me affiliation to Legon University. I would especially like to thank Dr Odotei of the African Studies Centre for your inspiring talks and for your input, and for introducing me to Patience. It was so nice to have you as a keynote speaker at the MARE Conference in 2003 and I hope we will continue working together. Thanks are also due to the Asafo department, to the librarians of the African Study Centre and to the secretaries of Dr Odotei. Thanks to Dr Nukunya for welcoming me to Woe and for advising me during the homecoming event. I would also like to thank Dr Ameka of the University of Leiden for introducing me to Marlous Tamminga who gave me Ewe lessons in Leiden in preparation for my second fieldwork period and for introducing me to Godwin Dotsey Akaba who translated the Half Assini court case for me back in the Netherlands. Marlous and Godwin – Akpe!

MARE deserves a special mention in these acknowledgements since my work at MARE was so crucial to my PhD. This was good and created opportunities but was also a challenge in terms of time management. I enjoyed every bit of my work at MARE and would like to thank Jojada Verrips, Rob van Ginkel, Maarten Bavinck, John Kleinen, Leontine Visser, Angelique van Wingerden, Joeri Scholten, Sarah Coulthard, Derek Johnson and Iris Monnereau. Special thanks are due to Maarten. You are an inspiring person to work with. It is impressive how you manage to keep so many balls in the air, as is your constant optimism! Thanks for your trust in me, right from the start. Working at MARE was somehow all-inclusive. Personal and professional lives became connected thanks partly to the many dinners at Maarten’s place during which I met his wife... and children. Thank you Iris for being a co-viswijf with me in social science fisheries research. Derek, it was a pleasure working with you (in particular with MAST) and I am pleased we became friends in the process.

Credit should be given to my scientific guides, the ‘driehoek’; Maarten Bavinck, Leontine Visser and Ton Dietz. Having these three people guiding you through a PhD is a luxury and meant I acquired informed critique from three sides which in turn greatly improved my work. Although in the beginning I felt a bit intimidated during the ‘driehoek’ sessions, I quickly discovered that there was no need. Each participant played a unique role. I was most in contact with Maarten who acted as my daily supervisor. Maarten, thanks for always being there. Thanks also for encouraging me to engage in fisheries research. The fact that you came to the field, and my trip to India, were very important. Leontine, many thanks for your most valuable input. I needed your keen eye and frank comments and I appreciated how you always kept an eye on the personal side of things. It might be the female touch, but you always first asked me how I was doing and then talked about the thesis. Thank you also for consistently dragging me back to my anthropological roots. I wish you had also come to the field, perhaps you can another time? Ton, you are a true source of inspiration, always ‘up to it’! I especially value your bird’s eye view and your consistent questioning of the big story. You have shown me the value of social geography and I also enjoyed your appetite for politics. Thanks for offering me the opportunity to do this PhD research and for your trust in my capabilities. I would like to extend this appreciation to AMIDSt, for making my PhD financially possible. I also wish to thank the CERES graduate school for the great PhD training programme and for co-funding the VISTA film courses.

I would like to thank Esther van der Meer for introducing me to SISWO (where MARE was first based). That introduction had considerable consequences. I would like to thank Kitty Roukens, Peter Kroon, Kathy Heckscher, Luuk Lusink, Carolien Bouw, Bernard and Toos Kruithof at SISWO.

In AMIDSt I valued the contact I had with my fellow PhD researchers and especially Anna Laven, Hebe Verrest, Kees van der Geest, Edith van Ewijk, Benson Mulemi, Iris Monnereau, Ranjit Wickramasinghe, Emmanuel Nyankweli, Mercy Derkyi, Thomas Insaidoo, Aenne Post, Lothar Smith, Mirjam Kabki, Ellen Lammers, Joram Grünfeld, Sanne van der Kaay, Nadaf Haran, Marjolein van der Klis and Fenne Pinkster. I would also like to thank Sjaak van der Geest, Fred Zaal, Valentina Mazzucato, Jan Mansvelt Beck, Guus Borger, Ad de Bruijne, Els Veldhuizen, Arjan Sas and Ewald Engelen. Thanks are also due to Gert van der Meer, Barbara Lawa and Marjan van Heelsbergen, Guida Morais e Castro Ermida and Puikang Chan for all the practical support in PhD affairs! Michaela Hordijk, thank you for your constructive comments to the methodology section. I would also like to thank Howard Turner for his English language editing work on this thesis.

I would like to mention two PhD colleagues in particular, namely Anna Laven and Hebe Verrest. I am really happy that we were colleagues and working with you has been and is very stimulating and I have fond memories of our sessions at the University and in Groningen and Dalfsen as well. I am happy that our working relationship evolved into a friendship.

Thanks to the members of the Ghana Study Group, in particular Rijk van Dijk who was the initiator. Thanks also to Dick Foeken for accepting this thesis as a publication in the beautiful series of the African Studies Centre in Leiden; and Mieke Zwart for finalising the layout work. And thanks to Jean Hellwig (VISTA Far Reaching Visuals Foundation) and his inspirational courses on digital video.

I would also especially like to thank the Dutch Fish Product Board, in particular Wil van de Fliert, for giving me the extra time and space I needed to finish my thesis alongside my work (from September 2008 onwards) at the Board. I am looking forward to continuing to work on our sustainable mission!

Many thanks also to Isa Baud, who helped me in two ways. First of all by dragging me out of active service at MARE in the summer of 2006, which gave me the opportunity to focus on my PhD. Secondly by giving me access to her beautiful farmhouse in Dalfsen. The thatched roof of the farmhouse strangely reminded me of the fishermen’s houses in Akosua Village, and of how I explained to the fishermen how ‘rich’ they would be by Dutch standards because they lived in thatched houses. I went to Dalfsen on many occasions with Hebe and Anna, but also with Aenne or Sanne and sometimes Isa would be there as well. Those weeks of concentration, away from distraction, away from email, were exactly what I needed. The walks in the rural surrounding, making jam with Isa, the horses in the meadow in front of the house and the deep silence gradually created space in my head. Thank you Anna and Hebe for our inspiring discussions and the times we spent working together silently. It was a very stimulating experience. Thanks also to boer Dunnink who would come by to feed the cats, drink a cup of coffee at the kitchen table, work in the vegetable garden and take time to explain to the city ladies when we could eat which vegetables.

There is one person whom I would like to mention in the context of becoming a Dr, and that is my grade 6 teacher, Meester Boelens, at my primary school De Klokbeker in Ermelo. Your decision to place me at the right level of secondary education despite my CITO test score gave me confidence, and the results since have proven that your trust in my capabilities was not misplaced.

Finally, I would like to thank my family (Jaap & Marga, Frank & Kristina, Rita & Guy, Joost, Frans & Beppechien, Fenna, Brecht and Sytze, Tom & Anka, Max, Tim & Natalie, Anita & Pat, Arno and Laura, Sarina & Dolf) and friends (Hester, Linda & Khalid, Claudia & Eustace, Jeanet & Sander, Esther & Matthijs, Martha, Annelies & Arjen, Olmo & Elles, Matthieu, Jo & Anne-Sofie, Marysol & Reginald) for the support they gave me in all kinds of ways and for doing what is not always self-evident, namely being there when needed and accepting my absence from social engagements during the past year. I am looking forward to being able to give new input to our relationships!

Special thanks are due to Rita and Guy and Jaap and Marga for taking care of Lucas almost on a monthly basis during the final months of my writing. I know that you did that with love and pleasure, but that only makes me feel more grateful. I would like to thank Rita especially for reading that incomprehensible French text which resulted in your warning that I should not do what those researchers did, namely make simple things unnecessarily complicated. Thanks also for all those delicious home-cooked meals we took with us on our trips back from Belgium. I would like to thank Jaap and Marga, or rather pap en mam, first for my childhood in Pakistan together with Joost and Frans. I am sure it was that which steered me towards anthropology. Thanks also for your ever-lasting trust in my capabilities which has helped me to accomplish this goal. More importantly, however, thank you for your unconditional love.
Lieve Lucas you have been a wonderful boy and the flexibility you showed was a gift. Your coming taught me a great lesson, namely that the importance of lots of things in life, including a PhD, is relative.

My last word is for Ben. Lieve Ben, thanks for your continuous support(!), involvement and patience during the PhD process and thanks for sharing the ‘ups and downs’. I am happy to know that we both cherish our time spent in Ghana and look forward to our future. It has arrived at last: life after the PhD…
