Acknowledgments

I am very grateful to

Henkjan Honing, my supervisor, for teaching me how to become a researcher, always believing in me, and making this thesis possible; Leigh Smith, my unofficial second daily supervisor, for countless talks about the significance of doing research and for sharing his vast knowledge about the world; Remko Schah, my promotor, for his valuable suggestions on the conceptual level and his liberal way of advising; the EmCAP project, for supporting me financially and providing inspiring interactions with an extraordinary group of researchers; the ILLC, for accepting people surfing on the margin of their wave; Bruno Repp, the most concise and disciplined person I know, for helping to make my scribbles look proper; István Winkler and Gábor Hádén from the MTIP in Budapest, and Glenn Schellenberg, Patrick Hunter and Stephanie Stalinsky from the Department of Psychology in Toronto, for hosting me during my research visits and providing great grounds for collaborations; all the students that participated in a project or class I taught; all fellow PhD students, researchers, and awesome administrative staff from the ILLC, especially my dozen office mates; Alex, Amelie, Andreas, Ansten, Charlotte, Gaëlle, Herman, Jacob, Jonathan, Loesha, Luc, Nicole, Rebecca, Reinco, Salvador, Tracy, and Teun, for sharing energy, music, thoughts, travels, dances, and houses in the last four years; Alexandra, Arthur, Elena, Gabriele, Ilja, Marijan, Monika, Oliver, and Sabine, for keeping me connected to my motherland; the Occii, for promoting the alternative; Harry Partch, Wevie Stonder, and Frederic Chopin, for their other-wordly music; my father, mother, and brothers, for being loving, understanding, and supportive; Arnaud, for being a zebra without a single vice de fabrication; my wonderful grandmother, Josefa, for showing me how to live and die.
