Acknowledgements

First of all, and most of all, I want to thank my promotores, Jan Willem Duyvendak and Maarten Hajer. Their intellectual influence on my work will become apparent on the following pages but I also want to thank them for their support and encouragement in times of doubt and confusion.

The Amsterdam School for Social Sciences at the University of Amsterdam financed this research and offered a stimulating and exciting working environment – the PhD students, the faculty, the management: everything was perfect (but not in a sterile or over-organized sort of way). I started writing this manuscript during a fellowship at the Center for Cultural Sociology at Yale University. I want to thank Ron Eyerman and Phil Gorski for hosting me and the Netherlands Organisation for Scientific Research (NWO) for providing a travel grant. The manuscript was completed while I was starting a new job at the Sociology department of the Erasmus University Rotterdam. Godfried Engbersen gave me all the time I needed to complete the manuscript; I wish to thank him for his patience and trust. I also want to thank my new colleagues for their warm welcome at the department.

In various settings and at different stages, I received helpful comments and criticisms on ideas or draft texts from Miriyam Aouragh, Ward Berenschot, Christian Broër, Peter Cohen, Bram de Swaan, Mustafa Emirbayer, Ron Eyerman, Nancy Foner, Marcel Ham, Silke Heumann, Maarten Loopmans, Marcel Maussen, Walter Nicholls, Katharina Paul, Kateryna Pishchikova, Willem Schinkel, Christian Scholl and Imrat Verhoeven. Takeo David Hymans helped me in the last stages of the process with correcting and editing the manuscript.

A number of people helped me with gathering, processing and analyzing the data presented in Parts II and III of this study. First of all, I need to mention my respondents. This study is based in part on 120 interviews with participants in integration politics. I promised them that I would protect their anonymity as much as possible, which is why I do not mention their (real) names. The data on discursive struggles in Part II were processed with the help of several student assistants, including Tito Bachmeyer, Aicha Fadel, Frank Heuts, Josip Kesic, Lester van der Pluijm and Wendy Wittenberg. Vincent Traag of the University of Louvain and Jeroen Bruggeman of the University of Amsterdam provided invaluable help in processing the network data and developing the network measures. The chapters on Amsterdam in Part III build upon and extend certain arguments that were first developed in a joint research project with Ugo Rossi and Henk van Houtum. Part III also uses data on subsidy relationships that Frank van Steenbergen gathered as part of his research assistantship and master's thesis.

I wish to thank these colleagues and friends for helping me in so many different ways. It has been a pleasure and a privilege to work with – and learn from – you. I of course take full responsibility for any errors of fact or interpretation that remain.

This dissertation is dedicated to my parents and to our weekly dinner meetings. Our get-togethers did not just give me a pleasant break from work but also taught me valuable lessons on love, empathy and the art of conviviality.

I have so often told my love, my friends and my family that I could not spend time with them because I had to work on this project. I will be happy to thank them in person for their forbearance and support at a nice post-doctoral party.
