0.3 Definitions
  0.3.1 Definition of the term ‘town’
  0.3.2 Definition of the term ‘new town’

0.4 Historiography
  0.4.1 Historiography and source material
  0.4.2 Typological classification

PART I: CASE STUDIES

1 THE NEW TOWNS OF KING EDWARD I IN WALES

1.1 Introduction: geography and history
  1.1.1 Norman conquest
  1.1.2 Reconquest by Welsh rulers
  1.1.3 Anglo-Norman (re-)conquests

1.2 Urban prelude: new town foundations before King Edward I
   (second half of the 11th century to c.1270)

1.3 King Edward I’s conquest of northern Wales and town foundations

1.4 Motives
  1.4.1 Military motives
  1.4.2 Economic motives

1.5 Settlers

1.6 Planners

1.7 Survey of the Edwardian boroughs of northern Wales
  1.7.1 Flint
  1.7.2 Rhuddlan
  1.7.3 Aberystwyth
  1.7.4 Conwy
  1.7.5 Caernarfon
  1.7.6 Harlech
  1.7.7 Criccieth
  1.7.8 Bere
  1.7.9 Caerwys
  1.7.10 Beaumaris
  1.7.11 Newborough

1.8 General spatial aspects of the Edwardian towns in Wales
  1.8.1 Locations
1.8.2 Urban layout
  1.8.2.1 Outline forms and relief
  1.8.2.2 House lots
  1.8.2.3 Streets
1.8.3 Architectural elements
  1.8.3.1 Town defences
  1.8.3.2 Castles
  1.8.3.3 Ecclesiastical houses
  1.8.3.4 Town halls
  1.8.3.5 Houses
1.9 End of the high-period of town foundation
1.10 Conclusion

2 THE BASTIDES OF SOUTHWEST FRANCE
2.1 Introduction: geography and history
  2.1.1 Territorial and political history
2.2 The term 'bastide'
2.3 Origins: colonisation and settlement foundations in southwestern France, 12th -13th centuries
  2.3.1 Sauvetés
  2.3.2 Castelnaux
2.4 Bastides: chronology and founders
  2.4.1 Bastide-foundations under Count Raymond VII of Toulouse
  2.4.2 Bastide foundations in ‘paréage’
  2.4.3 Bastide foundations under Alphonse de Poitiers
  2.4.4 Bastide foundations under the English king-dukes
  2.4.5 Bastide foundations under the French kings
  2.4.6 Bastide foundations by smaller lords
  2.4.7 End of the period of bastide foundations
2.5 Motives for the foundation of bastides
  2.5.1 Military motives
  2.5.2 Protection of population and travelers
  2.5.3 Administrative motives
  2.5.4 Economic motives
    2.5.4.1 Markets
    2.5.4.2 Farming out revenues
    2.5.4.3 Bastide foundations by Cistercian abbeys
    2.5.4.4 Reorganisation of the economy and agrarian structures
    2.5.4.5 Viticulture and wine trade
2.6 Actions preceding the foundation of bastides and foundation rituals
2.7 ‘Chartes de coutumes’
2.8 Settlers
2.9 Planners
2.10 Spatial aspects of the bastides
  2.10.1 Locations
  2.10.2 Setting out the allotment
  2.10.3 Historiography of the urban form of bastides
    2.10.3.1 The ‘archetype’ of the bastides
    2.10.3.2 Typologies
  2.10.4 Urban layout
    2.10.4.1 General plan forms of the original plantations
    2.10.4.2 Outline forms
    2.10.4.3 Relief
    2.10.4.4 House lots
    2.10.4.5 Street blocks
    2.10.4.6 Streets
2.10.4.7 Market places 143
2.10.5 Architectural elements 146
2.10.5.1 Town defences 146
2.10.5.2 Castles 147
2.10.5.3 Ecclesiastical houses 147
2.10.5.4 Market halls and town halls 151
2.10.5.5 Houses 152
2.10.6 Spatial structures of extra-urban town grounds 154

2.11 Conclusion 157

3 THE FLORENTINE TERRE NUOVE 161
3.1 Introduction: geography and history 161
3.1.1 Florence and the countryside 163
3.2 Origins: the decades preceding the creation of the terre nuove 164
3.2.1 The political situation in Florence in the late 13th century: Guelphs and Ghibellines 164
3.2.2 Earlier town foundations by other city-states of northern and central Italy 166
3.3 The Florentine new town foundations in contemporary documents 166
3.4 The term terre nuove fiorentine 168
3.5 Motives for the foundations of the terre nuove 169
3.5.1 Military motives 170
3.5.1.1 Fighting the rebels and gaining control over the contado 170
3.5.1.2 Fortificatory function 170
3.5.1.3 Guarding the main routes and protecting travellers 171
3.5.2 Dispossessing the rebels of their subjects and land, and enlarging the territory 171
3.5.3 Administrative function 172
3.5.4 Economic motives 172
3.5.5 The official main motive versus economic motives 173
3.6 Settlers 174
3.7 Planners 175
3.8 Survey of the terre nuove fiorentine 176
3.8.1 Castelfranco di Sopra 176
3.8.2 San Giovanni Valdarno 181
3.8.3 Scarperia 186
3.8.4 Firenzuola 191
3.8.5 Terranuova Bracciolini 195
3.8.6 Giglio Fiorentino 198
3.9 General spatial aspects of the terre nuove 202
3.9.1 The locations 202
3.9.2 Urban layout 203
3.9.2.1 General plan form of the original plantations 203
3.9.2.2 Outline forms and size 203
3.9.2.3 Relief 204
3.9.2.4 Streets 204
3.9.2.5 Piazzas 205
3.9.2.6 House lots 206
3.9.2.7 Gardens 206
3.9.3 Architectural elements 207
3.9.3.1 Town defences 207
3.9.3.2 Ecclesiastical houses 209
3.9.3.3 Town halls 209
3.9.3.4 Public loggias 210
3.9.3.5 Houses 210

3.10 Conclusion 212
4 COMPARISON OF THE THREE GROUPS OF NEW TOWNS

4.1 Founders

4.2 Motives

4.3 Settlers

4.4 Locations

4.5 Urban form
   4.5.1 Differences in regularity
   4.5.2 Defences
   4.5.3 House lots
   4.5.4 Market places

4.6 Similarities

PART II: ASPECTS OF NEW TOWN CREATION

5 THE SITING OF NEWLY FOUNDED AND TRANSPLANTED TOWNS

5.1 Aspects of general importance in the siting of new towns
   5.1.1 Defence
   5.1.2 Water
   5.1.3 Roads
   5.1.4 Mutual distance and centrality
   5.1.5 Possession of the ground
   5.1.6 Pre-urban settlement nuclei

5.2 High and low sites
   5.2.1 Prevention of flooding

5.3 Settlement transplantations

6 THE USE OF GEOMETRY IN THE DESIGN OF NEW TOWN PLANS
   IN THE HIGH-PERIOD OF TOWN FOUNDATION

6.1 Arithmetic design of urban plans by use of rational dimensions, and reconstruction of original town plans by metrological analysis

6.2 Design of urban plans by complex geometry

6.3 Various theories of complex design geometry in the plans of newly created towns
   6.3.1 Pythagorean triangles in the design of bastide plans
   6.3.2 Rotated squares in the design of bastide plans
   6.3.3 Complex geometry in the design of the bastide of Grenade-sur-Garonne
      6.3.3.1 Metrological analysis of the plan of Grenade-sur-Garonne
   6.3.4 Complex geometry in the design of various town plans according to Humpert and Schenk

6.4 Complex geometry in the town plan design of the terre nuove fiorentine
   6.4.1 Theories regarding the method of design of the terre nuove-plans
      6.4.1.1 Guidoni
      6.4.1.2 Friedman
      6.4.1.3 Pirillo
      6.4.1.4 Other theories on the design of the terre nuove plans
   6.4.2 Analysis of the theories of Guidoni, Friedman and Pirillo in comparison to the terre nuove plans
   6.4.3 The inspiration for the geometric method used in the terre nuove plan designs and the way it was handled
      6.4.3.1 Possible sources of inspiration for the proposed geometric design method of the terre nuove plans
      6.4.3.2 How was the design geometry handled?
   6.4.4 The motive for the use of design geometry in the terre nuove plans

6.5 Complex geometry versus simpler methods of planning, and modern ideas on ‘medieval design’

6.6 Conclusion
9.6 The laying out of the plan
  9.6.1 Regular plan forms
  9.6.2 Irregular plan forms
9.7 Preparation of the site
9.8 Construction of governmental and public buildings
9.9 Settlers
9.10 Later extensions to towns

Part II: THE PHYSICAL ELEMENTS OF NEW TOWNS

9.11 House lots
9.12 Houses
9.13 Street structures
9.14 Streets
9.15 Access roads and navigation facilities
9.16 Market places
9.17 Town defences
9.18 Ecclesiastical buildings and cemeteries
9.19 Market halls and town halls
9.20 Mills
9.21 Wells
9.22 Fortresses
9.23 Extra-urban town land
9.24 Other physical elements

Part III: HISTORIOGRAPHY

10 THE NEW TOWNS OF THE 13th-14th CENTURIES WITHIN THE GENERAL HISTORY OF TOWN PLANNING

10.1 New town planning in previous eras
10.2 New town foundation in the 9th to 14th centuries
  10.2.1 On the origin of the orthogonal town plan of the high-period of town foundation
    10.2.1.1 The planned village
  10.2.2 Increasing regularity in the plans of new towns
10.3 New towns with regular plans after the high-period of town foundation
  10.3.1 Colonial towns and cities
10.4 Some considerations on the historic use of the orthogonal grid in space design

11 THE PROBLEM OF PERIODISATION: THE PERCEPTION OF TOWN PLANNING IN THE 13th-14th CENTURIES IN RELATION TO THE TRADITIONAL VIEW ON EUROPEAN HISTORY

11.1 The cliché image of the ‘picturesque organic medieval town’
  11.1.1 Confusing concepts: ‘organic’ and ‘gothic’ town building
11.2 The cliché image of ‘renaissance town building’
11.3 An alternative vision of the historical development of town building
11.4 The problem of periodisation into style periods
    11.4.1 The concept of ‘the renaissance’ as a period
11.5 Conclusion
12 ABSTRACT AND CONCLUDING REMARKS 424
12.1 Abstract 424
12.2 Concluding remarks 440
12.2.1 Creating an overview of complex history: how historical generalisations led to erroneous ideas about the history of town building 440
12.2.2 Individual cases versus general conclusions and classifications 441
12.2.3 Different perceptions of urban design in the 12th to 15th centuries 442
12.2.4 General motives for town foundation and the international system of market trade 443
12.2.5 General remarks on the results of this study 444
12.2.6 Suggestions for further research 445
